AMID HIGH OIL PRICES DUE TO WEST ASIA CRISIS, SURGE IN NON-OIL EXPORTS TOO

Goods exports hit all-time high of $50 bn in Oct, trade gap at yr's peak

Encouraging that growth not confined to any particular sector: Commerce Secy

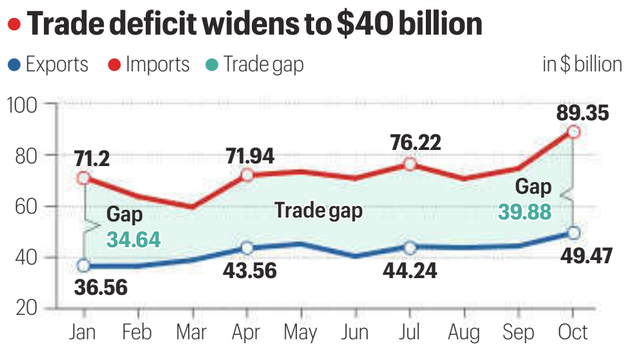

Ravi Dutta Mishra
New Delhi, November 13

A SHARP surge in electronic and petroleum products exports drove India's goods exports to its highest level ever of $50 billion in October, while record high crude oil prices amid the Iran war also took imports to a five-year high of $90 billion, driving the goods trade deficit to $40 billion, the highest during the calendar year, according to data released Friday by the Ministry of Commerce and Industry.

Goods exports rose 45% in October to $49.47 billion from $34.11 billion, while imports jumped 16% to $89.35 billion from $76.69 billion. This drove the trade gap to $39.88 billion, marginally lower than the goods trade gap of $42.58 billion in October last year. This comes as a combination of factors, including a weak rupee and lower US tariffs, has been helping exports log strong

US has assured India comparative edge under trade deal, says official

New Delhi, November 13

AMERICAN NEGOTIATORS have assured India of a comparative advantage over its rivals under the proposed trade deal, a senior government official said Friday. The legal text of the agreement, the official said, will also include provisions to ensure that the US does not impose additional tariffs after the deal is signed between the two countries.

Negotiators from both sides continue to engage in discussions to finalise the trade deal. The last round of talks, held during the first week of November, resulted in the resolution of several portions of the customs and trade facilitation chapter, the official said.

"US negotiators were here for two days during the first week of November. There is a chapter on customs and trade facilitation under the US trade deal. Many portions of the text were resolved. The US side has assured us of comparative advantage over our competitors.

POLL OFFICER, NCP LEADER FLAG BULK VOTER ADDRESS CHANGES

These voters in Pune never moved, someone changed their addresses anyway

Maharashtra Chief Electoral Officer calls for action; Pune poll officer issues show-cause notice, police complaint also filed

Pune, November 13

MORE THAN two years ago, in October 2024, the Pune District Election Officer (DEO) first flagged to the Maharashtra Chief Electoral Officer (CEO) irregular patterns in voter applications for change in address to other constituencies. Two more letters followed five months later, one suggesting such applications were being submitted in bulk by persons other than the voters concerned.

On November 19, 2025, NCP leader Ajit Gavhane, hand-delivered a complaint with a list of 58 names and claimed the list was an example of "fraudulent deletions/ shifting of voters" and there were more than 15,000 cases. This finally led the Maharashtra CEO's office to write to the Pune DEO ordering an inquiry, according to documents reviewed by The Indian Express.

At least six voters in the list whose addresses were changed and names deleted from their original constituency said they had neither shifted residences nor submitted any form for address change.

Fatimabi Mehboob Sayyed, one of the voters on Gavhane's list, said her voter address was shifted to Ovala Majiwada in Thane without her knowledge.

Salar Shaikh, Welfare Party of India candidate in the Pimpri-Chinchwad Municipal Corporation election this year, said his name was shifted to neighbouring Pimpri. His voter ID has now been deleted from the SIR draft roll because, he alleged, the Booth Level Officer in Pimpri refused to fill his SIR enumeration form. "How was my name shifted in the first place," he asked. He has filled Form 6 for re-inclusion in the voter list.

In his complaint, Gavhane had claimed these 58 voters were

Form 8: How does it work?

When voters shift to a different location, they have to submit Form 8 in the new constituency to get their names enrolled in the rolls there. The Electoral Registration Officer of the new constituency verifies the documents submitted. He can also ask the Booth Level Officer to verify the address. The ERO of the new constituency approves or rejects the application on the EC's ERONET software. If the Form 8 is approved, the software automatically creates a Form 7 in voters' old constituencies to delete them from the voter list there.

Visa row: Congress says Govt blocked delegates, BJP slams 'anti-India' agenda

Tharoor claims 115 of 315 speakers invited to the summit stopped; MEA says visa matters are sovereign functions of a govt

Telangana CM A Revanth Reddy in Hyderabad, Friday

A ROW erupted Friday after the Congress and Telangana Chief Minister A Revanth Reddy said several speakers invited to the second edition of the Bharat Summit in Hyderabad were denied entry into India or had their visas cancelled by the Centre.

Union Minister and Telangana BJP leader G Kishan Reddy said the summit — the two-day gathering began Friday — was meant to bring together forces critical of India, and questioned the Congress leadership's motives for organising it.

Asked about the denial of visas, Randhir Jaiswal, spokesperson for the Ministry of External Affairs, said, "Visa matters are sovereign functions of any country or any government." There was no immediate response from the Ministry of Home Affairs.

Addressing a press conference, Chief Minister Revanth Reddy said the Ministry of External Affairs and the Ministry of Home Affairs had stopped people who question Prime Minister Narendra Modi from reaching the country. He did not say how many people were denied entry, but earlier in the day, Congress MP Shashi Tharoor claimed that 115 of 315 speakers were not allowed to reach India.

Revanth Reddy said, "I don't understand why the BJP is worried about diverse oppositional voices. Narendra Modi thinks he is a dictator who can stifle all voices."

He said the Bharat Summit

Jimmy Leivon
Imphal, November 13

FOUR NAGA civilians, including a woman and her son, were killed after suspected militants ambushed two vehicles on National Highway-202 in Manipur's Ukhrul district on Friday afternoon.

The incident occurred at New Haven, around 10 km southwest of Sangshak police station. The victims were travelling towards Imphal in two separate vehicles, police said.

The victims were identified as Kapangkhui RS and Haoleila RS, both residents of Shangshak village, and August Ngalung and Khanmila, residents of Tashar village. While the two from Shangshak were siblings, those from Tashar were mother and son.

Friday's attack is the latest in a series of violent incidents targeting civilian vehicles along NH-202. The first such attack occurred in April this year when two Naga men, including an ex-serviceman, were killed in a similar ambush along the highway.

On November 4, some gunmen attacked a convoy of civilian vehicles at night. However, no casualty was reported in that incident.

'Disappointed' over poll mess in IOA: Olympic body before India 2036 pitch

Mihir Vasavda
Mumbai, November 13

INDIA'S PITCH to host the 2036 Olympics is days away. But as an Indian delegation prepares to present its case to the International Olympic Committee's (IOC) Future Host Commission on November 26, the world body has flagged fresh turmoil in the Indian Olympic Association (IOA), warning that the disputes are damaging the Olympic movement in the country.

The IOC, it is learnt, sent a strongly-worded letter to the IOA past midnight Thursday, expressing disappointment over allegations of misconduct during the election process and disputes over the rules governing it. The letter was copied to the Olympic Council of Asia and Nita Ambani, the IOC member from India.

An IOC spokesperson told

● AS JUDGE OF CALCUTTA HC, HE HAD ISSUED AN 'ORDER' SENTENCING THEN CJI AND SEVEN OTHER SC JUDGES TO FIVE YEARS' RIGOROUS IMPRISONMENT

Caste, confrontation, contempt: Former High Court judge C S Karnan dies at 71

Chennai, November 13

C S KARNAN, a former High Court judge who accused colleagues of caste discrimination and was sentenced to six months in prison for criminal contempt while still on the bench, died in Chennai on Friday. He was 71.

Justice Karnan's confrontations with fellow judges unfolded as the judiciary faced questions on how it chose its members, how it assessed merit, and how much of that process it was willing to explain. He brought caste into those disputes with an insistence that drew attention to who sat on the bench and how Dalit lawyers and judges were treated.

His own conduct came under scrutiny, too, first from colleagues who accused him of indiscipline and later from lawyers who complained that his public statements threatened and demeaned women.

Born on June 12, 1955, Karnan came from Karnatham, a village in Tamil Nadu's Cuddalore district. He enrolled as an advocate in April 1984 and practised at the Madras High Court and in Chennai's civil and family courts, handling civil, criminal, constitutional and service matters.

In 2009, the Madras High Court's collegium, led by Chief Justice A K Ganguly, recommended him for appointment as an additional judge. The Supreme Court's collegium, headed by then Chief Justice of India K G Balakrishnan, accepted the recommendation. The selection process that brought him to the bench would become one of the subjects of his most public disputes.

First brush with controversy

In January 2014, as a Madras High Court Bench heard a public interest petition alleging partisanship in the selection of additional judges, Justice Karnan walked into the courtroom in plain clothes. He interrupted a lawyer's argument and told the judges that the selection was unfair, a senior court official recalled in May 2015. He said he was part of the judiciary and would file an affidavit. He did, and it was dismissed. That evening, the Chief Justice, R K Agrawal, convened a meeting of the full court to discuss his conduct.

He was the first sitting HC judge to have been sentenced to jail

At a news conference in his chambers, Justice Karnan described what he said were humiliations he had endured as a Dalit judge. At one meeting, he said, a colleague sitting cross-legged beside him deliberately touched him with a shoe, then apologised. Two other judges, he recalled, watched and smiled. A lawyer close to him said in May 2015 that Justice Karnan had kept quiet about some incidents because he feared bringing the court into disrepute. A senior judge, speaking that same month, recalled complaints of corruption over bail decisions by Justice Karnan's vacation bench in 2011.

By May 2015, a dispute with another Chief Justice, Sanjay Kishan Kaul, had reached the Supreme Court. Justice Karnan had challenged the composition of a panel that would interview candidates for civil judgeships, saying it should include a Muslim judge and a Christian judge. He stayed the administrative order constituting the panel. A division bench stayed his order, and he subsequently threatened contempt proceedings against Chief Justice Kaul. The High Court's registrar general asked the Supreme Court to intervene.

Justice Karnan was transferred to the Calcutta High Court in March 2016. In February 2017, seven Supreme Court judges led by then Chief Justice of India J S Khehar began contempt proceedings on their own motion over allegations against other judges that the court deemed baseless. They barred Justice Karnan from judicial and administrative work.

'Sentenced' the CJI

On May 1, the Supreme Court ordered a medical board to assess whether Justice Karnan was fit to defend himself. He declined the examination and submitted a written declaration on May 4 saying he was of stable mind. On May 8, invoking growth during the last two quarters.

Goods exports

While high oil prices amid the Iran war dominated goods trade, India's non-oil exports also surged, with non-oil, non-gems and jewellery exports up nearly 32% to $37.38 billion from $28.11 billion. The imports in the category also surged by 21% to $ 51.64 billion compared to $42.33 billion in October last year.

With much lower tariffs compared to last year, goods exports to the US registered a steep jump of 39.3% to $8.72 billion compared to $6.26 billion in October last year. Meanwhile, imports from Russia and China also rose sharply by 74% and 46%, respectively.

Commerce Secretary Rajesh Agrawal said the merchandise exports have registered a new peak. "This is the highest-ever monthly merchandise export value, along with the highest monthly growth of 45.06% in the last five years. The total exports are also estimated at $89.99 billion in October 2026, which is again the highest-ever monthly export value. We have not achieved $89.99 billion ever till now in any month. This is also the third-highest monthly growth rate of 29.90% in the last five years."

Agrawal said the encouraging part of the growth is that it is not confined to any particular sector or geography.

Data showed petroleum goods purchases surged 54% to $22.81 billion, making up the highest category-wise imports. Electronic goods imports also surged by 49.95% to 14.31 billion in October this year compared to October 2025. Petroleum products exports, meanwhile, surged 140% to $8.89 billion and electronic goods exports surged 62% to $6.64 billion.

While oil and electronic goods imports rose, gold and silver imports slipped despite the festive season. Gold imports slipped 62% to $5.51 billion compared to $14.71 billion, and silver imports declined 28.26% to $1.91 billion in October this year against $2.71 billion in October 2025.

India, the world's third-largest oil consumer, has seen its import costs jump amid disruptions in the backdrop of the war in West Asia. New Delhi imports nearly 85 per cent of its oil needs. Brent crude futures have fallen to around $92 a barrel from around $115 a barrel in October.

Federation of Indian Export Organisations (FIEO) President S C Ralhan said exports to the US grew 39%, China 48% and Japan 45%, while shipments to the UK, Taiwan and Kenya rose by more than 50%.

"The gains across established and emerging markets underline the importance of market diversification. Exporters must build on these opportunities through stronger buyer relationships, competitive products and greater utilisation of preferential access under India's Free Trade Agreements," Ralhan said.

Pankaj Chadha, Chairman, Engineering Exports Promotion Council (EEPC), said engineering goods exports also jumped 36% in October and that the engineering goods sector has maintained consistent performance despite many odds.

"The free trade pacts India has signed with many key trade partners have opened new avenues for growth. We see strong opportunities ahead as new FTAs are signed with the European Union and other trade blocs," Chadha said.

US assured India edge in trade deal

We will have to see how their tariff structure unfolds," the official said.

Asked about the possibility of future tariffs on India, the official said, "What we have said is that in case there is a future tariff which goes beyond commitment, India also reserves the right to modify concessions."

India and the US, the official said, are in the process of concluding negotiations for the first tranche of the bilateral trade agreement, which will not cover services.

The final US tariff structure is expected to become clearer after the United States Trade Representative (USTR) releases the findings of its second Section 301 investigation into industrial overcapacity. This refers to a situation in which a sector or a country's production capacity exceeds market demand.

India is expecting favourable treatment in the investigation into overcapacity. It is among 14 countries, including Australia, Japan and the European Union, which have "acknowledged" that structural excess capacity and production in any country pose significant challenges for all trading partners. These countries have also decided to take "effective actions" to address the challenge.

The US had imposed 10% tariffs on India in June, lower than the 12.5% rate proposed in March, after the Directorate General of Foreign Trade (DGFT) announced a prohibition on imports of goods produced using forced labour. This came against the backdrop of the first Section 301 investigation into imports of goods produced through forced labour.

With the US midterm elections out of the way, the USTR is expected to release the findings of its investigation into industrial overcapacity. This could revive the tariff architecture that the Trump administration had been planning since early 2025. Most trade deals lost their legal backing after reciprocal tariffs were declared illegal by the US Supreme Court earlier this year.

On November 3, Commerce and Industry Minister Piyush Goyal said India will not allow imports of genetically modified (GM) products or dairy products produced using calf meat.

The US has been pushing for exports of GM products under the trade deal with India and has cited Indian regulations restricting imports of certain dairy products as non-tariff barriers. In its report on non-tariff barriers released in March 2025, the USTR had described India's requirements for dairy imports as "onerous".

"We are very sensitive to the opening of the dairy sector. Till date, we have never opened the dairy sector for anybody. We are sensitive about not allowing any GM products to come to India. We have never allowed it, and we will never allow it in the future. We are sensitive to our religious sensitivities. Very often in foreign countries, they use calf meat or rennet while producing their dairy products. We have never allowed it in the past, and we will not do so in the future. It has to be strictly certified," Goyal had said while interacting with students at Kirori Mal College.

The USTR report had said India requires dairy products intended for food to be derived from animals that have not consumed feed containing internal organs, blood meal or tissues of ruminant or porcine origin. It also noted that exporting countries must certify these conditions, which, according to the report, lack a discernible animal or human health justification.

'Disappointed' over IOA poll mess, says IOC

The Indian Express: "The IOC is very disappointed to note that, once again, issues and disputes seem to have resurfaced in the conduct of the IOA election process and in the implementation of the rules governing the IOA elections, despite all the efforts made over the past few years to establish a strong governance framework for the IOA in accordance with the Olympic Charter and the Basic Principles of Good Governance within the Olympic Movement."

"This extremely regrettable situation is, once again, negatively affecting the operations and reputation of the Olympic Movement in India. The IOC has urged the IOA and the Electoral Officer directly responsible for the IOA election process to ensure that the IOA elections can be conducted in full compliance with the Olympic Charter, the IOA Constitution, and all applicable rules, in a free and fair manner and without any external interference," the spokesperson said.

Hours after the IOC's warning, the nomination of IOA president PT Usha as a representative of the Ice Hockey Association of India (IHAI) to the IOA General Assembly was challenged, along with those of more than a dozen other nominees.

The objections are part of the scrutiny of nominations ahead of the December 5 elections to the IOA Executive Council. The final electoral roll is scheduled to be published November 15.

This is not the first time the IOC has flagged governance concerns as India pursues its Olympic ambition. In July 2025, the world body raised concerns over the functioning of the IOA, India's anti-doping record and its performance at previous Olympic Games. These were identified as areas India would need to address to establish its credentials as a potential host.

"We will review all the objections and publish the final list as per the election schedule," said a senior official involved in conducting the elections. "However, it must be noted that the processes have been followed fairly and transparently, in accordance with the Indian and IOC rules."

The latest controversy comes at a particularly sensitive time for India's Olympic ambitions. On November 26, an Indian delegation is set to make a presentation to the IOC's Future Host Commission as part of the country's bid to host the 2036 Games. The presentation will be an important milestone in India's ongoing dialogue with the IOC over its hosting aspirations.

The delegation is expected to include Reliance Foundation chairperson Nita Ambani and Usha, along with officials from the Central and Gujarat governments and an athlete. They are expected to outline India's case, with Ahmedabad proposed as the host city.

However, recent developments have raised questions over whether Usha will remain a part of the presentation team. Her nomination via the ice hockey federation for re-election as IOA president became particularly contentious because it offered the former sprinter another route to the electoral college after she failed to secure a place among the eight Sportspersons of Outstanding Merit (SOM) elected to the General Assembly. She finished fifth in the women's category with 40 votes, behind Anju Bobby George (53), Rani Rampal (50), Dola Banerjee (45) and Saina Nehwal (43).

The SOM elections were preceded by the withdrawal of 13 candidates — eight men and five women — from the contest for eight places in the General Assembly. Several athletes subsequently alleged that their withdrawals were not voluntary.

Former sprinter Ashwini Nachappa said she had been asked to pull out under external pressure. Former world No. 1 double-trap shooter Ronjan Sodhi also said repeated requests from people associated with different sports had led him to withdraw.

The withdrawals meant that all four men's positions were filled unopposed, while the women's category went to a vote. The allegations have raised questions over the fairness of a process that will determine who gets to vote in, and contest, the elections.

The presidential contest is also taking shape. Olympic medallists Gagan Narang, Saina Nehwal and Anju Bobby George are among the names in contention for the top job, alongside Usha. Former Delhi BJP chief Virendra Sachdeva, representing the Archery Association of India, is also in the fray.

India submitted its expression of interest to host the 2036 Games in October 2024 and is in the fray with six other countries, including Qatar, Turkey, Germany, South Korea, Hungary and South Africa. The IOC's evaluation process is expected to continue over the coming years, with the host city likely to be selected in 2029.

Sent consular request to Pak over stranded Indian sailor: MEA

New Delhi: Amid reports that an Indian seafarer, along with five crew members of a vessel, has been stranded at Karachi port for the past few months, India on Friday said it has made a consular request to the Pakistani side.

External Affairs Ministry spokesperson Randhir Jaiswal, in response to a query at his biweekly media briefing, also said, "We have been in touch with these people there, and also with their employer, as in the shipping company and their agent, and we are trying to resolve this issue."

He was asked about an Indian merchant navy officer, who, along with five crew members, has reportedly been stranded at Karachi port, and whose family members have been appealing to the authorities for the last several months to bring him back home. PTI

Manipur

Despite the government providing security escorts for civilians on the highway, the protection remains limited to a 12.7-km stretch from Litan Police Station to Yaingangpokpi police outpost.

Friday's ambush took place around 10 km before Litan Police Station, raising fresh concerns over the safety of commuters travelling along the vulnerable highway.

Congress Legislature Party (CLP) leader K Meghachandra questioned the response of both the Central and state governments amid recurring incidents of violence and the continued suffering of the people.

"Government condolences cannot replace innocent lives. The state government must take responsibility for the continuing loss of civilian lives," he said, questioning the Centre's continued silence despite Manipur witnessing more than three-and-a-half years of violence.

HC judge

the law against atrocities on Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes, he issued a purported order sentencing CJI Khehar and seven other Supreme Court judges to five years of rigorous imprisonment.

The next day, the Supreme Court found him guilty of criminal contempt and sentenced him to six months in prison. The court said his conduct had damaged the reputations of individual judges and the judiciary as a whole. It also barred the media from reporting his subsequent statements.

Justice Karnan eluded police and retired on his 62nd birthday — June 12, 2017. Police arrested him near Coimbatore eight days later. That November, his aide and legal adviser W Peter Ramesh Kumar said after visiting him in prison that the retired judge planned to publish 22 of his orders alongside an autobiography. In 2018, Justice Karnan founded the Anti Corruption Dynamic Party.

A complicated legacy

Justice Karnan was arrested again in Chennai on December 2, 2020, after videos circulated in which, according to the police account, he made obscene remarks and threatened sexual violence against people associated with the judiciary. A senior lawyer's complaint to the CJI described his remarks as an affront to the dignity of women. The Madras High Court granted him bail in March 2021 after he submitted two affidavits offering unconditional apologies and promising to refrain from repeating the conduct. The court made bail conditional on that undertaking.

Karnan's place in the judiciary was complicated. He alleged caste discrimination within a system whose powers he himself exercised, faced allegations of corruption over his own bail decisions, and was embraced by caste groups that saw in his defiance a cause of their own.

Voters in Pune

permanent residents of voter lists in Bhosari Assembly constituency and had "never filed any application for transfer or deletion of their names from the said voter list". He had contested on an NCP (Sharad Pawar) ticket and lost the Bhosari Assembly seat in the 2024 state Assembly elections.

The Pune DEO received reports from eight election officers from Thane, Khed Alandi, Ambegaon, Khadakvasla, Nashik East, Bhosari, Kothrud and Pimpri. In his inquiry report, the Electoral Registration Officer (ERO) of Bhosari constituency said the address of one voter in Gavhane's list of 58 had changed within the constituency. The remaining 57 figured among the 5,603 voters, for whom Form 7 (the form for deleting a voter) had been automatically generated after address change applications were submitted and accepted at some other constituency.

Following queries from The Indian Express, the Pune DEO had on October 31, 2026, directed authorities to take action against those responsible. He issued a show cause notice to Pimpri ERO over how the address change applications were accepted without filed verification. On November 1, the Pimpri Assistant ERO filed a non-cognizable offence report at the Nigdi police station under Section 31 of The Representation of the People Act, 1950, against persons who used four mobile numbers to file 40 Form 8 applications.

The Pune DEO finally assessed that in Gavhane's list of 58 voters, three voters had died, 11 were living where they were registered, and voter registration (Form 6) applications had since been filed online to bring the remaining 43 back on the rolls in Bhosari Assembly constituency.

The Indian Express sent a query to state CEO S Chockalingam on November 2 asking for information on Gavhane's complaint. On the same day, his office sent a letter to the Pune DEO asking for explanation and action taken.

Pune DEO's 3 letters, NCP leader's complaint, and internal reports from 8 election officers

On October 17, 2024, Pune District Election Officer (DEO) Suhas Diwase first wrote to Chockalingam (Maharashtra CEO) that a large number of voters from different Assembly constituencies in his district were being shifted to other constituencies through applications of address change (done through Form 8). Many of these applications provided the same electricity bill as proof of the new address, and the name on the bill did not match the voter's name. Further, many applications came from a single IP address.

Five months later, on March 20, 2025, Pune's new DEO Jitendra Dudi wrote to the CEO office again and said that upon verification, it was found that the voters were living in the same place, and had not shifted.

Dudi followed up with another letter to the CEO on April 4, 2025, alerting that the number of such applications could rise because of the upcoming local body elections in January 2026. When a Form 8 (form for address change) is approved in the new constituency, the ERONET software automatically generates a Form 7, which is the form for deleting a voter in the voter's original constituency.

He wrote that the Electoral Registration Officer (ERO) in the original constituency from where voters are being shifted should have an option to "reject" the Form 7 on the ERONET software. The portal offers only one option to "accept" the forms. He also said the voter list should not be updated until the ERO concerned thoroughly verifies the application.

Then on November 19, 2025, Gavhane complained to the CEO office that someone had shifted voters' names in bulk without their knowledge; 51 of the 58 names in the list are Muslim. Gavhane's associate Sarang Kamtekar, who prepared the list, said that it was only a 'representative list' with the real number being much larger.

The CEO's office ordered an inquiry the next day. In their reports, election officials in Pimpri, Thane and Khadakvasla admitted that address change requests through Form 8 had been approved without any field check by Booth Level Officers (BLOs). In his report, the Pimpri ERO said the 42 applications were accepted based on the document submitted, but without BLO verification since there was limited time. The Thane DEO said the 10 applications (from Gavhane's list) were accepted again on the basis of documents submitted, but without BLO verification. Khadakvasla ERO also said the one application was accepted based on the document submitted.

The other five internal reports by EROs of Nashik East, Ambegaon, Khed Alandi, Bhosari and Kothrud, said BLO verifications were completed and changes were approved accordingly. Each approval automatically generated a Form 7, the form for deleting a voter, in the voter's original constituency.

The Pune DEO's reply to the CEO-ordered inquiry, dated January 27, 2026, enclosed all these eight reports. In his report, the DEO said, a huge number of applications had been received during the 2024 election period. "Since it was necessary to print and publish the electoral roll within the stipulated period for the upcoming Assembly elections, it was necessary to approve or reject the said application within the stipulated period for decision," he said.

Chockalingam told The Indian Express that a "reject" option was not feasible, as it would leave a voter registered in two constituencies at once. He said the issue of bulk filing had now been addressed by making an Aadhaar-based digital signature mandatory, which the Election Commission introduced in September 2025.

is being held as a precursor to the Invest Telangana Global Summit, which will be held in December in Hyderabad. "We have created a platform for global discussion," he said.

He said Rahul Gandhi, Leader of Opposition in Lok Sabha, will attend the summit Saturday and unveil the Telangana policy on gig and platform workers. "He will also address the gathering here. What is wrong with that?" he said.

Former Union Minister and Congress leader Salman Khurshid, also present at the press conference, said, "Discussing important policy dimensions is very important. Eight sessions are being held for the growth and development of Telangana alone... Davos is a centre for global discussion. We want Hyderabad to become such a place."

Around 1,000 people from India and 70 other countries were to participate in the summit, covering subjects ranging from climate change to infrastructure to investment.

Earlier, Tharoor questioned the legal basis for the action against the delegates who were denied entry. He said the summit would conclude Saturday, making it impossible to reverse the decision in time for the affected participants to attend.

"What a shame that a proud democracy has become so insecure that it must stifle any voices it fears will be critical," he wrote.

Congress MP and Telangana Congress media in-charge Chamala Kiran Kumar Reddy had also claimed earlier that nearly 30 per cent of the invitees could not travel to India because of visa-related troubles.

The BJP called the event an "anti-India summit". Telangana BJP president N Ramchander Rao asked why crores should be spent on the summit when the state government was facing financial constraints. He accused Revanth Reddy of spending public money to sponsor who he called "anti-India forces" to "please Rahul Gandhi".

On Thursday, Norwegian journalist Helle Lyng — among the invited speakers at the event and scheduled to speak Saturday — claimed that she was denied entry into India despite having a visa. In May this year, when Modi was in Oslo, she had asked him why he did not take questions from the press.

In a post on X, Lyng alleged that despite having received an Indian visa and political clearance for her visit, she was informed by the Indian Embassy in Norway that she would not be allowed to travel to India. She attributed the alleged decision to "orders from above" in the Ministry of Home Affairs.

"I got a visa to India and was supposed to leave this morning to attend the Bharat Summit in Hyderabad. I had been invited as a panellist and speaker on the future of media and press freedom. But 'orders from above' in the Ministry of Home Affairs have cancelled my visa," Lyng claimed in her post.

50,000-person cap, 10 am to 5 pm: Police draft on SOP for protests at Ramlila Ground

Sakshi Chand
New Delhi, November 13

Ramlila Ground has been designated as a protest site. FILE

RAMLILA GROUND in Central Delhi will have a maximum capacity to host 50,000 people, with protests, rallies and demonstrations permitted only between 10 am and 5 pm, according to a draft standard operating procedure (SOP) prepared by the Delhi Police.

The draft, which also prohibits marches and processions from the venue, has been sent to the Police Headquarters for approval, said officers. The guidelines, prepared by senior district officers, are currently under review and expected to be issued in the coming days, they added.

The move comes after Jantar Mantar was de-notified by the Delhi Police as a protest venue and three alternative sites – Ramlila Ground, Burari Ground and CBD Ground – were designated for protests and demonstrations in October.

According to the draft SOP, while Ramlila Ground can accommodate a maximum of 50,000 people, the number of participants allowed at each event will be determined by the competent authority based on its nature, expected turnout, available space and public safety requirements.

The draft guidelines specify that ground will function as a static venue for protests, with no permission needed for marches or processions either from the site or as part of an event. Organisers will be required to ensure peaceful assembly and dispersal of participants.

Under the proposed rules, organisers must first obtain a 'Venue Availability Certificate' from the Municipal Corporation of Delhi (MCD) – which owns Ramlila Ground – before applying for police permission through the designated Arrangement Cell of the DCP, Central District.

Applications will ordinarily have to be submitted at least 10 days before the event, excluding the day of the programme.

The MCD certificate alone will not authorise an event; separate police permission and other applicable clearances will be mandatory.

The draft also lays down traffic and parking requirements. Organisers will have to coordinate with the Traffic Police and local police over vehicle movement, designated drop-off points and parking arrangements. Roads, footpaths and emergency routes must remain unobstructed. Participants will be prohibited from carrying lathis, firearms, spears, swords, sharp objects and other articles barred under law.

Violence, arson, damage to public or private property and activities that threaten public order will also be prohibited. Operating drones over or near the ground will require prior approval. Organisers will have to comply with noise pollution norms, obtain safety clearances for temporary structures and make arrangements for drinking water, medical assistance, toilets, sanitation and waste disposal.

Faridabad parking dispute murder: CCTV footage reveals plan, say police

Abhimanyu Hazarika
Faridabad, November 13

Paramjith Dhankhar was shot dead outside his house.

A WEEK after a 42-year-old corporate executive was shot dead outside his home allegedly by his neighbour in Faridabad over a parking dispute, investigators are piecing together the sequence of events following the recovery of murder weapon and SUV — allegedly used by the accused to escape the crime scene — from Punjab, officers said on Friday. The CCTV footage recovered from the four-storey residential building, where the two lived, shows how the accused, Mohan Sharma alias Monu, allegedly lured Paramjith Dhankhar outside his house in Sector 21C and killed him, officers added. He fled the crime scene after the murder in the SUV.

Sharma was arrested on November 7 from Ballabgarh a day after the murder. Officers said that during his initial police custody, he disclosed the location of the murder weapon. Police recovered the licensed pistol — allegedly used in the murder — and a magazine containing six live cartridges from Samana in Punjab's Patiala district on Monday. The SUV in which he allegedly escaped was recovered from Punjab's Kapurthala on Wednesday.

A local court on Friday remanded him to two weeks of judicial custody after his three-day police remand ended even as Sharma told the court that he had been falsely implicated.

Timestamped CCTV footage from the four-storey building in Sector 21C allegedly reveals how Sharma planned the November 6 shooting and lured Dhankhar, a Singapore-based corporate executive, out of his ground-floor flat, said investigators.

Police and family members have verified the recordings.

Sharma carried a backpack and paced in the stilt parking area before calling Dhankhar downstairs.

He kept his right hand inside his trouser pocket, where investigators said he had concealed his loaded licensed pistol alongside a fully loaded spare magazine. At the ground-floor entrance, audio captured on camera records Sharma repeatedly addressing Dhankhar as "Dhankhar sahab" and pleading, "Bhaiya, bhaiya, bhaiya, please," to draw him into the parking area on the pretext of moving his car.

Dhankhar allegedly came downstairs with his son, Shaurya, and indicated he did not wish to have a confrontation. Sharma then pulled the pistol from his pocket and fired at close range, as per the footage.

Shaurya ran upstairs. An injured Dhankhar ran toward the main road and tried to lock the building gate to block Sharma.

Sharma allegedly chased him onto the road and shot him multiple times in the back after he collapsed. Dhankhar's mother and wife rushed outside after hearing the gunshots.

The footage shows Sharma standing near Dhankhar's mother, emptying his entire magazine at close range, and reloading the pistol with a spare magazine. In the CCTV footage, Sharma is heard shouting "Diwali Mubarak," calling Dhankhar's wife a "widow," and yelling, "Come out, you all... Today, I will kill you all." He then walked to his parked SUV and drove away. Investigators said Sharma ran a real estate business in Faridabad and a scrap copper business in Rajasthan. Crime Branch teams arrested him near Dealer Chowk in Ballabgarh on November 7. "The CCTV footage shows the crime was planned. Sharma also had planned in advance how he would shield and hide his family, and where he would try to dispose of the murder weapon and his vehicle used to flee. But during questioning, he slowly spilled the beans... Further information on his family's whereabouts are being sought still", an officer said.

Face wash, body lotion seized as two illegal cosmetics units busted in Capital

New Delhi, November 13

FACE WASH and body lotion were among the cosmetic products allegedly being manufactured illegally at two unlicensed units in Outer Delhi's Pooth Khurd that were raided by the Drugs Control department on Thursday, according to officials. Stocks of cosmetic products, machinery, equipment, and raw materials were seized during the operation, they added.

The Delhi government said the raids were conducted on the instructions of Health Minister Dr Pankaj Kumar Singh as part of its efforts to strengthen regulatory enforcement and safeguard public health. "The Delhi government is committed to ensuring that every product available to consumers meets the prescribed standards of safety and quality. Manufacturing cosmetic products without a valid licence is a serious violation of the law and cannot be permitted. Such unauthorised activities not only undermine the regulatory framework but may also put consumers' health and safety at risk," Singh said.

He said the Drugs Control department has stepped up its enforcement efforts and is taking strict action against those found violating the law. "Our priority is to protect citizens from unsafe and unauthorised products and ensure accountability across the sector," he added.

With reference to the Pooth Khurd raid, officials said that both premises were allegedly engaged in the manufacturing and packaging of cosmetic products without valid manufacturing licences in violation of the Drugs and Cosmetics Act, 1940, and the Cosmetics Rules, 2020.

At one of the premises, officials found products marketed under the brand name 'Ghar Soaps Ayurveda + Science'. At the second unit, illegally manufactured products such as 'Feel Plus Ultra Definition Liquid Foundation' and 'SHFFO Almond & Vitamin E Body Lotion' were found.

An anti-smog gun sprays water to curb air pollution and smog in New Delhi on Friday. AMIT MEHRA

Delhi AQI is close to severe but rain is likely on Sunday

New Delhi, November 13

DELHI'S AIR quality deteriorated further on Friday, with the Air Quality Index (AQI) rising to 373 from 350 a day earlier, just 27 points short of the 'Severe' category. As a thick blanket of smog hung over the Capital, the India Meteorological Department (IMD) forecast light rain or drizzle on Sunday, raising hopes of some relief from pollution.

Delhi was the second most polluted city in the country, behind Ballabgarh in NCR, which recorded an AQI of 400. Gurugram and Noida remained in the 'Very Poor' category, with readings of 324 and 313, respectively.

An analysis of Central Pollution Control Board (CPCB) data since Diwali on November 8 showed that several areas outside Delhi's 13 officially designated pollution hotspots recorded some of the highest pollution levels.

Among the 13, only Punjabi Bagh has ranked among the ten stations with the highest average AQI, at about 410. Jahangirpuri (about 396), Vivek Vihar (about 390) and Mundka (about 390) also recorded high pollution levels.

North Campus recorded the highest average PM2.5 concentration at 316.6 micrograms per cubic metre (µg/m³), with an average AQI of around 430. ITO recorded an average PM2.5 concentration of 311.5 µg/m³ and an AQI of 423, while Chandni Chowk had the highest average AQI of 442.

Further, Burari Crossing, DTU, Pusa (IITM), Talkatora Garden, CRRI Mathura Road and NSUT Jaffarpur ranked among the highest for fine particulate matter.

According to the Indian Institute of Tropical Meteorology's (IITM) source apportionment data for Friday, vehicles were the biggest contributor to PM2.5 pollution at 31.5%, followed by secondary organic aerosols (24.7%) and biomass burning (20.8%), including crop residue, wood and dung cakes. Secondary inorganic aerosols accounted for 12.7%, waste burning 5.6%, firecrackers 2.2% and industrial sources 1.8%.

DEATH by breath

Satellite monitoring by CREAMS Lab at ICAR-IARI recorded 537 paddy residue burning incidents across the region on Friday, including 246 in Madhya Pradesh, 214 in Punjab, 33 each in Uttar Pradesh and Rajasthan and 11 in Haryana.

Between September 15 and November 13, Punjab recorded 5,785 farm fires, up from 4,734 during the corresponding period last year and and 79,751 in 2020. Officials cautioned that cloud cover over several northern states has been obstructing satellite monitoring, so the actual number of fires could be higher.

Smoke from these fires reaches Delhi mainly when winds blow from the north-west or north. When winds are light, that smoke mixes with local emissions and lingers, so regional and city sources build up together.

Weather conditions, meanwhile, remained unfavourable for dispersal of pollutants. Safdarjung weather station recorded a maximum temperature of 31.4 degrees Celsius, 2.9 degrees above normal, while the minimum settled at 16.2 degrees, 2.7 degrees above normal. South-westerly winds of 10 to 15 kmph prevailed and moderate fog formed at isolated places in the morning.

According to the IMD, a fresh Western Disturbance is expected to affect Northwest India on Sunday, bringing the possibility of very light rain or drizzle at isolated places in Delhi and nearby areas. Stronger winds and drizzle help in dispersal of pollutants.

On Saturday, winds are forecast to be north-westerly (10 to 15 kmph), with moderate fog at isolated places in the morning.

The shift from Friday's calm, south-westerly conditions to north-westerly flow is significant. North-westerly winds can bring smoke from fires in Punjab and Haryana into Delhi. However, night temperatures are expected to fall by 3-5 degrees Celsius between November 16 and 19, potentially trapping pollutants closer to the ground. The IITM has forecast that AQI will remain in the 'Very Poor' category over the coming days.

Body cameras for Delhi's anti-pollution teams as city battles bad air

Alok Singh
New Delhi, November 13

FOLLOWING COMPLAINTS of inadequate inspections and lapses in enforcement, the Delhi government has planned to equip its on-ground enforcement teams with body-worn cameras to monitor action against pollution violations.

Over 300 joint teams comprising officials from the Delhi Pollution Control Committee (DPCC), Municipal Corporation of Delhi (MCD) and Civil Defence personnel have been deployed round the clock to prevent pollution-causing activities, including waste and biomass burning and violations of construction-related restrictions across the city.

The government has named these joint teams 'Vayu Rakshak'. Sources said the government plans to provide 100 body-worn cameras to 100 teams. One member in each team will wear the camera and keep it switched on while responding to complaints, conducting inspections and taking action at the site.

"The cameras can record footage for almost eight hours. Officials at the Integrated Command and Control Centre (ICCC) can also access the live feed on their screens during inspections,' a source said.

Sources said the move follows complaints of non-compliance and lapses by officials while responding to pollution-related complaints. In some instances, teams allegedly failed to reach the reported locations despite being informed about violations. There have also been instances, including on Diwali night, when enforcement teams did not respond to calls from the control centre or provide feedback to their respective departments on the status of complaints.

Teams from the Transport Department and the Delhi Traffic Police have also been deployed at city borders and pollution hotspots to prevent vehicles below the BS-VI emission standards from plying in the Capital.

East Delhi colony residents wanted senior citizens' centre. DDA sold empty plot for shopping complex

The plot under contention in the DDA housing colony in East Delhi's Mayur Vihar Phase III. EXPRESS

Devansh Mittal
New Delhi, November 13

WALK INTO this housing colony in East Delhi's Mayur Vihar Phase III, and the dust and honking outside seem to disappear.

The main road is lined with old, large trees on both sides, their canopies almost completely covering it. Residents buy their daily essentials from the society's only dairy booth, while children run around on the roads. These three-storey Delhi Development Authority (DDA) buildings and the slow pace of life are reminiscent of an older Delhi.

At the far end of the society, a 599-square-metre plot is nestled between a play school and a Delhi Jal Board pumping station. The land was earlier used as a dumping ground for leaves and horticultural waste. After sightings of snakes, residents got the area cleaned and began parking their cars there.

In July 2016, residents wrote to the DDA, asking it to develop this plot, officially earmarked for community use, as a recreation centre for senior citizens. The DDA did not respond. Nearly a decade later, on October 11 this year, residents found a notice on the plot in Hindi and English. It read: "This property has been purchased by VVM Builders Private Limited. All owners are requested to remove their vehicles from the property."

Residents later found out that the DDA had put the plot up for auction and sold it to a builder for a shopping complex. The notice also said a gate would be installed and locked.

They went to court. On October 16, the Delhi High Court stayed the "effect and operation" of the DDA's decision to convert the plot from "Other Community Facilities" (OCF) to "local shopping/convenience shopping" until the next hearing on February 26, 2027.

Why residents are against move

The flats in the DDA buildings were built and launched under the 9th Self Financing Scheme three decades ago in what was then Kondli Gharoli and is now Mayur Vihar Phase III. Buyers paid for their flats in installments as construction progressed.

There are 976 flats, of which 320 are in Pocket A, represented by the Mayuri Residents' Welfare Association (RWA). Instead of a shopping complex, residents want facilities that directly benefit the community, he said, suggesting a library, gym, community hall or function hall.

RWA president Tejvir Deshwal echoed the concerns: "The plot has no separate entry and exit points, so anyone who would eventually come to the proposed shopping complex will have to go through our society, posing security concerns."

After the notice appeared, the RWA said it complained to the Station House Officer of Ghazipur police station. Residents alleged that "unauthorised persons accompanied by unknown musclemen" came to the back of the pocket, "issuing threats of forcibly taking possession of the area". According to the complaint, a PCR team arrived after a call to 112. Residents claimed police declined to register an FIR, calling it a civil dispute.

Change in plot's designated use

DDA initiated the process of selling the land around 10 months ago. The plot was included in an e-auction tender issued on December 27, 2025, and listed as an "OCF plot".

Under the Delhi Master Plan, OCF land can be used for old age homes, working women's hostels, night shelters, care centres for mentally and differently abled persons, adult education centres, orphanages, science centres and religious premises.

In February, the DDA's 434th screening committee meeting approved changing the use of plots in the Kondli Gharoli layout plan from OCF to "Local Shopping/Convenient Shopping (LSC/CS)".

The DDA told The Indian Express that the plot was sold to VVM Builders Private Limited for Rs 5.35 crore. A Letter of Intent was issued to the builder on March 24, 2026, and possession of the plot has since been handed over.

In their petition, residents argued that they were never consulted. They claimed that the DDA skipped the legal process for changing land use, which requires a public notice in newspapers so residents can raise objections.

The DDA, however, defended its decision, saying the change was an adjustment at the layout-plan level and did not involve a change in the land use under the Master Plan.

Its spokesperson said the interests of the RWA had not been set aside.

What transpired in the court

Residents claimed in their petition that the plot is part of the society's common area, in which flat owners hold an undivided interest under the Delhi Apartment Ownership Act, 1986, and that it "cannot be sold off independent of the residential homes".

The DDA, however, told the court that its decision was "only a change in layout plan", which did not need the legal process for amending the Master Plan.

The court accepted that a layout plan can be changed this way, but said the change must still follow the Master Plan.

"In the present case, the Master Plan specifically describes what constitutes OCF. Local shopping and convenience shopping do not form part of that description. Hence, prima facie, the modified layout plan does not conform to the Master Plan of Delhi, 2021," the court said.

It said residents would "suffer irreparable loss and injury" if third parties got rights over the land, while a stay would cause "no prejudice" to the DDA or the builder.

Infra, parents' consent: Schools to draw up their own hybrid class plan in Noida, Ghaziabad

Drishti Jain
Noida, November 13

AS AIR pollution continues to choke Delhi-NCR, with Noida and Ghaziabad among the worst-hit cities in the region, schools have switched to hybrid mode for students up to Class 5 Thursday onwards. While there is no single framework to be followed, the implementation of the government order has been left to schools, depending on the availability of resources, a senior Education department official from Gautam Buddha Nagar district said.

The teachers are required to seek consent from the parents whether they wish to continue their child's classes online or offline. "If there are 40 students in a class, and out of them, 20 wish to attend class online, teachers get divided. One is asked to teach to the online students and another teaches in the classroom," the official explained, adding that the schools have been adopting such transitions since Covid-19.

"If students are still attending physical classes in large numbers, the teacher simultaneously teaches both lot of students," the official said, adding as the teacher uses a board to teach, a screen is often arranged to connect to the children sitting at homes.

"But it really depends on the infrastructure available in schools," he emphasised.

In an official notice signed on Friday, the Basic Education Officer of Ghaziabad stated that due to the Graded Response Action Plan (GRAP) implemented in Delhi-NCR, an order was issued by the Commission for Air Quality Management (CAQM) on November 6, making it "mandatory to conduct classes in schools for children up to Class 5 in a 'hybrid' mode in the territorial jurisdiction of NCT of Delhi and in the districts of Gurugram, Faridabad, Ghaziabad and Gautam Buddha Nagar- Clause 8(ii)".

The clause allows for a hybrid mode of teaching, both in physical and online mode wherever online mode is feasible. "Strict compliance with the above instructions issued by the District Magistrate, Ghaziabad, should be ensured," the order also stated adding that necessary action will be taken against the school concerned.

On the implementation of the order, a government school teacher from Gautam Buddha Nagar, who did not wished to be named, said that children from poor families — whose parents mostly work in garment factories across the city — come to attend classes as they don't have means to attend classes online. "The parents are at work for almost 10-12 hours a day and do not have a spare phone to give to their children. Out of 60 in class, only around five must be having an extra phone at home," the teacher said.

Like Delhi and other neighbouring cities, Noida and Ghaziabad witnessed deterioration in air quality on Diwali, with AQI readings of 318 and 344, respectively. In the days that followed, the AQI continued to hover in 'Poor' and 'Very Poor' categories.

EXHIBITION AT GALERIE MIRCHANDANI + STEINRUECKE WILL CONTINUE UNTIL DECEMBER 10

The trophies we hide: Artist Vinod Balak explores uneasy truths of life

New Delhi, November 13

IN MANY Indian homes, a glass cabinet holds a family's prized possessions – trophies, souvenirs and mementoes that tell stories of achievement and pride. But what if, alongside these, there were trophies celebrating the things people would rather keep hidden?

A paunch-shaped trophy for the 'Great Patriarch'. Or a black shield for the 'Best Smoker'. Also, awards depicting narcissism and other less flattering human traits.

All displayed with as much pride as any other achievement.

It is part of his ongoing exhibition Dis.em.bodied H.ours at Galerie Mirchandani + Steinruecke in Delhi's Defence Colony.

For Balak, the idea comes from the distance between the image people present to the world and the selves they reveal behind closed doors. "When we are in the privacy of our homes or some other private space, we let go of our bad side. We hide them in our home, ironically the only place we reveal that side of us is our home," he says.

"I took patriarchy, narcissism and other vices, and made them into a trophy," he adds.

Growing up at Malappuram in Keralam, Balak would eagerly look through books and magazines his father — a postal department employee — brought home from work.

"These books included art publications and Christian magazines with religious illustrations and reproductions of Raja Ravi Varma paintings... I was very much into them," he says, recalling how these images stayed with him even before he understood their significance. He also had access to Soviet magazines as well as Russian and Chinese revolutionary posters. His father's political beliefs and Keralam's communist culture further shaped his interest in revolution.

Decades later, those memories find their way into his work, Garden of the Rebellion, where hands point in different directions, recalling revolutionary posters. In the painting, he places these political references against a metropolitan setting – featuring pigeons and people playing football.

The footballers take him back to Malappuram. "The Sevens football culture was part of everyday life there," he says.

(Clockwise from above) Garden of the Rebellion, Garden of the Rebellion (2023) and Dis.em.Bodied H.ours (2026). EXPRESS

After spending six to seven years in Hyderabad, Balak moved to Delhi around 12 years ago. "I live in Noida now, and the area that I live in made me more conscious of the city's social divisions and visible hierarchies and the lives of working class people," he says.

In his artwork Garden of the Rebellion (2023), people gather around a large ball, their bodies and skin tones bringing together different identities.

Balak uses the scene to talk about caste and social hierarchy. "I have observed how a large crowd of people physically comes closer to one another during religious gatherings or disasters. Yet, this closeness does not necessarily erase the divisions that shape their everyday lives... When we are in a crowd, people don't know each other. They float like a river," he adds.

THE EVENTFUL city

In his oil on canvas Dis.em.Bodied H.ours (2026), a trophy-like form represents the female body and how women are portrayed in commercial imagery. Other forms emerge from a childhood memory of collecting cigarette butts discarded by a neighbour and arranging them into different shapes with friends.

Balak, who studied painting at the Government College of Fine Arts, Thrissur, and later at S N School of Fine Arts in Hyderabad, has explored landscapes, religious satire, migration and social hierarchies. "It is a continuous process. It is a journey, actually, one episode to another episode," he says.

The exhibition will continue until December 10.

WORLD DIABETES DAY

Diabetes and Safe Participation in Sports

Dr. Deepak Khandelwal
Endocrinologist

People with diabetes can often enjoy recreational and competitive sports, but preparation should reflect their treatment and activity level. Exercise may affect glucose during activity and for hours afterwards, particularly in people using insulin or certain glucose-lowering medicines. A personalised plan can address monitoring, access to fast-acting carbohydrate when appropriate, hydration, and recovery. Athletes should discuss recurring low or high readings with their healthcare team rather than changing treatment independently. Coaches and teammates can help by understanding agreed emergency procedures while respecting privacy. Diabetes does not automatically exclude someone from sport; thoughtful planning helps make participation safer and more confident.

World Diabetes Day: Turning Awareness into Action

Dr. Chhavi Agrawal
Endocrinologist

World Diabetes Day is a reminder that diabetes awareness must translate into meaningful action. Individuals can learn their risk factors, seek appropriate testing, and follow a care plan developed with qualified healthcare professionals. Families can offer practical encouragement without blame, while schools, workplaces, and communities can help make reliable information and supportive services easier to access. Public messages should correct myths and avoid promising miracle cures or blaming people for their condition. Diabetes care is not identical for everyone, and support should reflect individual needs. Lasting progress comes from informed choices, respectful care, and sustained efforts throughout the year.

Diabetes and Cultural Food Traditions

Dr. Himanshu Sharma
Endocrinologist

Traditional foods can remain part of a balanced eating pattern for people living with diabetes. There is no single universal diabetes diet, and recommendations should consider culture, preferences, health needs, and affordability. Portion sizes, preparation methods, meal combinations, and the amount of carbohydrate eaten can influence glucose levels. Rather than banning familiar dishes, a dietitian can help adapt recipes and build balanced meals using locally available ingredients. Patients should also consider how their medicines relate to meal timing. Food advice that respects cultural traditions is more practical and sustainable than rigid rules that make people feel they must abandon their usual cuisine.

Diabetes and the Importance of Emergency Contacts

People living with diabetes can take a simple precaution by keeping emergency contact information accessible. A phone's emergency contact feature or a medical identification card may help others contact a family member if assistance is needed. People who use insulin or medicines that can cause low blood glucose should discuss with their healthcare professional whether close contacts need to recognise and respond to hypoglycaemia. Emergency information should be accurate, current, and shared with consent. These preparations do not replace medical care, but they can make communication easier during an unexpected event. A small practical step can help people feel better prepared.

Dr. Pawan Goel

Diabetes and the Importance of Continuity During Relocation

Moving to another city or changing healthcare providers can interrupt diabetes care if records, prescriptions, and follow-up plans are not transferred. Before moving, ask for copies of recent test results, medication details, allergies, and relevant treatment instructions. Confirm how to obtain repeat prescriptions and locate a suitable healthcare facility at the new destination. People using insulin or other essential medicines should plan their supply in advance and store products as instructed. If a new clinician is involved, explain previous treatment difficulties and significant changes in health. A simple handover plan can reduce avoidable gaps and help maintain consistent care through life transitions.

Dr. Priyamvada Tyagi

Diabetes and Oral Medicines: Why Timing Matters

Dr. Setu Gupta
Endocrinologist

Some diabetes medicines are intended to be taken with food, while others have different timing instructions. Taking a medicine at the wrong time may affect tolerability, effectiveness, or the risk of low glucose, depending on the specific drug. Never assume that all diabetes tablets follow the same schedule. Read the prescription label and ask your pharmacist or clinician what to do if a dose is missed, a meal is delayed, or vomiting prevents you from eating. Do not double a dose unless specifically instructed. Clear medicine instructions help patients follow treatment safely and avoid preventable confusion in daily routines.

Diabetes and the Need for Accessible Health Information

Diabetes is a disease affecting a very large proportion of population. By latest estimates approximately 10 crore there are diabetics in India + a similar number with Pre-diabetes. Information about this disease is either lacking or confined to educated class. There is need to disseminate knowledge to common people in ordinary language that once you get Diabetes, the clock sets clicking. It is the major cause for heart disease, kidney failure and blindness. It affects almost every organ of the body. It's time we wake up and provide the best information to our public to take quick and correct decision.

Dr. Jagdish Mulchandani

Diabetes and Planning for Medical Appointments

A useful diabetes appointment begins with the questions a patient wants answered. Before the visit, write down concerns, recent changes in symptoms, difficulties following the treatment plan, and questions about future care. Bring glucose records if requested and an accurate list of medicines. Patients should feel able to discuss missed doses, costs, side effects, or lifestyle barriers honestly; this information helps clinicians provide realistic advice. If several issues need attention, ask which should be prioritised and what the next steps are. Leaving with a clear plan, follow-up date, and contact instructions can make care easier to manage.

Diabetes and the Importance of Respecting Individual Choices

Every person living with diabetes has different priorities, circumstances, and preferences. Some may need support with meal planning, others with treatment routines, work schedules, or emotional concerns. Helpful conversations begin by asking what matters to the person rather than assuming what they should do. Healthcare professionals can explain evidence-based options and their likely benefits and risks, while patients share what is practical for them. Family members can encourage healthy habits without policing food or criticising glucose readings. Respectful, collaborative care builds trust and makes it easier to discuss difficulties early, adjust plans appropriately, and work towards realistic health goals.

Dr. Rini Yadav

Diabetes and the Value of Clear Medicine Lists

Dr. Rakesh Pandit
Diabetologist

Many people take medicines for several conditions, making it easy to forget names, doses, or schedules. An updated medicine list can help prevent confusion when visiting different clinicians or receiving treatment in an emergency. Include prescription medicines, non-prescription products, supplements, allergies, and the way each medicine is taken. Record any recent changes and bring the list to appointments. If a medicine's purpose or instructions are unclear, ask a pharmacist or healthcare professional rather than guessing. A written list is particularly useful when prescriptions change or care is shared between facilities. Clear information supports safer communication and more coordinated treatment.

Diabetes and the Importance of Inclusive Public Spaces

Dr. Alok Joshi
Diabetologist

People living with diabetes may need access to water, toilets, food, medicines, or a private place to manage treatment while attending school, work, or public events. Clear and reasonable arrangements can make participation easier without unnecessary disclosure of personal health information. Event organisers, employers, and institutions can help by allowing appropriate breaks and ensuring staff know how to respond to a medical emergency. Individuals should follow their own care plans and applicable safety guidance. Inclusion does not mean making assumptions about what every person needs; it means listening, respecting privacy, and making practical adjustments when appropriate.

Diabetes Awareness Must Continue Beyond One Day

World Diabetes Day offers an opportunity to draw attention to a condition that requires sustained public understanding throughout the year. Awareness should extend beyond slogans to include accessible education, timely health assessments, respectful clinical care, and support for people managing treatment every day. Families can replace blame with encouragement, workplaces can consider reasonable needs, and communities can share reliable information instead of unverified cures. Healthcare organisations can review whether their services are understandable and accessible to different groups. Meaningful awareness is measured not only by how many people hear a message on one day, but also by whether that message leads to informed, supportive action over time.

Dr. Pankaj Aneja

Diabetes and Understanding Medical Consent

People living with diabetes have the right to understand their treatment options and participate in decisions about their care. Before a procedure or major treatment change, healthcare professionals should explain relevant benefits, risks, alternatives, and what may happen without the proposed intervention. Patients can ask for information in a language they understand and request clarification when medical terms are confusing. Family members may provide support when the patient wishes, while respecting the patient's autonomy and applicable consent requirements. Consent is an ongoing conversation, not merely a signature. Informed participation helps people make decisions that reflect their health needs, values, and preferences.

Dr. Meena Chhabra

Diabetes and the Importance of Understanding Test Limitations

No medical test provides a complete picture of health on its own. Blood glucose measurements show levels at a particular time, while HbA1c reflects average glucose over roughly two to three months. Certain conditions, including some forms of anaemia and changes in red blood cell turnover, can affect HbA1c interpretation. A clinician may therefore consider symptoms, medical history, and additional tests when results do not match. Patients should not diagnose themselves from one isolated number or disregard an unexpected result. Asking what a test measures, what may influence it, and whether repeat testing is needed can support informed decisions.

Dr. Inder Kasturia

Diabetes and the Importance of Reporting New Symptoms

Dr. Vimal Gupta
Diabetologist

People living with diabetes should not assume every new symptom is caused by their condition. Unusual fatigue, persistent pain, unexplained weight changes, fever, or other new problems may have several possible explanations and deserve appropriate assessment. Some symptoms require urgent attention, particularly confusion, difficulty breathing, severe dehydration, or loss of consciousness. Keeping track of when a symptom began, how it changes, and which medicines are being taken can help clinicians assess it. Avoid self-diagnosing or delaying care because a symptom seems familiar. Reporting changes promptly allows healthcare professionals to investigate possible causes and recommend suitable treatment.

Diabetes and the Risks of Unsupervised Dose Changes

Glucose readings may vary from day to day, but changing diabetes medicine doses without appropriate advice can be dangerous. A high reading does not automatically mean a dose should be increased, and a low reading may require an immediate response according to the person's care plan. Illness, meals, activity, other medicines, and missed doses can all influence glucose. Patients should ask their healthcare professional for clear instructions about what to do when readings fall outside their agreed range. Keeping a record of readings and symptoms can support decisions. Individualised guidance is safer than copying another person's dose or following online advice.

Woman dies day after she met with an accident and miscarried

New Delhi, November 13

A DAY after she met with an accident while on her way to the hospital and miscarried, a 32-year-old woman succumbed to her injuries at Sanjay Gandhi Memorial Hospital in Delhi on Friday, taking the death toll in the incident to four, police said.

Rakhi Singh and her husband Raja were at her parents' home at Loni in Ghaziabad when she experienced pain around 3.30 am on Thursday.

After struggling to find a vehicle to take her to the hospital, Raja finally managed to get Rakhi into a shared auto-rickshaw. There were seven others inside.

Around 5 am, a dumper coming from the opposite direction rammed into the auto-rickshaw on Pushta Road in Northeast Delhi's Sonia Vihar, overturning it. While Raja and Rakhi survived, their unborn child did not.

Two men, one of whom was identified as Satbir, were also killed in the accident, while several others, including a six-month-old baby, sustained injuries, police said.

Govt orders probe into Gurugram's drainage woes, seeks plan by December 31

Chandigarh, November 13

THE HARYANA government has ordered an investigation into Gurugram's drainage problems and directed the district administration to prepare a comprehensive urban flood management plan by December 31, 2026.

The Financial Commissioner, Revenue, and Additional Chief Secretary, Revenue and Disaster Management, Sumita Misra, said the Gurugram Deputy Commissioner has been directed to personally monitor the implementation of flood mitigation measures and ensure coordination among civic bodies, development authorities, engineering departments and police.

The directions follow a recent high-level meeting convened by the Union Ministry of Home Affairs under the chairmanship of the Additional Secretary (Disaster Management), where senior officials discussed measures to address Gurugram's persistent flooding problem. The government has directed the district administration to identify specific flooding hotspots and investigate the precise causes of water accumulation, including blocked drains and deficiencies in stormwater drainage design.

The government has directed the officials to prepare a comprehensive mitigation strategy, address the root causes of flooding, and focus on rainwater management rather than merely clearing waterlogged roads.

The officials said, "A City Action Plan for Urban Flood Management shall be developed by December 31 this year with clearly defined targets, milestones and time-bound interventions."

The deadline requires the administration to identify the problem areas and specify time-bound interventions to address the drainage and waterlogging issues.

The Millenium City has continued to be marred with waterlogging issues, especially during the monsoon season, leaving the residents and commuters massively inconvenienced.

On Mann's Lahore invite, MEA cites 'national policy' for Pakistan visits

Punjab CM Bhagwant Mann

New Delhi, November 13

DAYS AFTER Punjab Chief Minister Bhagwant Mann was invited as chief guest for the opening of an international Punjabi conference in Lahore on November 27, the Indian government on Friday said New Delhi has a national policy on Pakistan and expects everyone to follow it.

The invitation, dated October 25, was extended by a cultural and advocacy organisation, Punjabi Parchar, with Pakistani Punjabi poet Baba Najmi among its signatories. It specifies that the 4th International Punjabi Conference will open at 11 am on November 27 at the Punjab Institute of Language, Art & Culture (PILAC) in Lahore.

Ministry of External Affairs spokesperson Randhir Jaiswal, when asked about the invitation, said, "When it comes to relations with foreign nations, we have a national policy and expect everyone to abide by it... As far as our position on Pakistan after the Pahalgam terror attack is concerned, it should be amply clear to all as to where we stand."

SCO forum: China confirms presence, no word from Pak

PM to inaugurate SCO Civilisational Dialogue Forum, to be held between Nov 20 and 22

Divya A
New Delhi, November 13

WITH JUST a week to go for the SCO Civilisational Dialogue Forum to be held in New Delhi, there has been no word from Islamabad on its participation, even as 15 of the 25 invited countries — including China, Saudi Arabia, Turkiye and Iran — have confirmed their participation.

Meanwhile, as Pakistan has recently been invoking the Indus Valley Civilisation in the wake of India putting the Indus Waters Treaty in abeyance, New Delhi intends to offer all visiting delegates from SCO countries a lowdown of its 5,000-year civilisational history by holding the three-day event at the Purana Qila monument, and taking them through the excavated site, unravelling layers of the Capital's history.

When asked about this, Union Culture Minister Gajendra Shekhawat said, "When a country tries to talk about 5,000 years of Indus Valley Civilisation, they should be self-aware that they didn't exist at the time. Their story is just 80 years old."

The inaugural edition of the forum will be held between November 20 and 22, to be inaugurated by Prime Minister Narendra Modi. It is being organised jointly by the ministries of Culture and External Affairs. Shekhawat said all SCO member countries, partner countries, and observer countries have been invited. However, the window is still open for the remaining countries to send their representatives for participation, he said.

India has invited Pakistan's national heritage and Culture Minister Aurangzeb Khan Khichi for the event, the first such invitation extended by New Delhi to a senior minister of Pakistan ever since the military hostilities between the two countries in the wake of Operation Sindoor in May 2025 following the Pahalgam terror attack.

China, Kazakhstan, Iran, Tajikistan, Uzbekistan, Belarus, Azerbaijan, Armenia, Bahrain, Nepal, Saudi Arabia, Turkiye and Sri Lanka have confirmed their participation. While the Prime Minister will attend the inaugural ceremony on November 20, four key sessions will be held the following days, themed around civilisational and cultural expression, art and architecture, and language, literature and manuscripts, the minister said.

Shekhawat said India's aim was to ensure that the SCO was not merely a geopolitical and economic platform but also a forum for shared civilisational heritage and human values. He asserted that culture has the power to initiate dialogues and build bridges of trust between countries and civilisations.

Shekhawat said he remained "hopeful" that Pakistan would also confirm its participation in the coming days. "Pakistan's civilisation and cultural development is no different from ours. It has been less than 80 years since they separated from us; otherwise, their evolution happened alongside ours. Therefore, at least on this subject, there is no possibility whatsoever of us having any kind of differences," he noted.

The civilisational dialogue was first proposed by Prime Minister Modi during the SCO Heads of State summit in Tianjin in September 2025. Defence Minister Rajnath Singh formally announced that India would host the event while addressing the 25th SCO council of Heads of Government meeting in Tajikistan last month.

The key goals are to strengthen people-to-people ties and cultural engagement across Eurasian member states, and showcase the shared heritage, art, literature and traditions of ancient civilisations. Officials said the first edition will chart out a roadmap and framework for the upcoming editions.

Meanwhile, the SCO countries will also deliberate on filing joint nominations for UNESCO heritage lists owing to their cultural exchanges and influences over centuries, officials said.

'My phone tapped by PM': Rahul's Insta video & a dare

New Delhi, November 13

LEADER OF the Opposition Rahul Gandhi on Friday alleged that Prime Minister Narendra Modi was tapping his cellphone, and said that if the two of them have a one-on-one "debate", it will become clear "who is an anti-national".

The BJP leadership hit back at Gandhi, saying that Gandhi's allegations were "baseless" and that he levels such allegations without substance.

Responding to a question during an 'Ask me Anything' session on Instagram, Gandhi said, "The proof is here. It is in this phone. The PM knows it because he taps my phone. The moment he comes for the debate, one-on-one debate, everybody will know who is controlled by foreign powers, who is an anti-national and since when he has been an anti-national and lots of other details that I know and are on my phone." He also said the "one-on-one debate" will end Modi's political career.

Responding to another question about why he was insisting on a public debate when the BJP has said that the exchange can take place in Parliament, Gandhi said he was not allowed to speak in the House, and his microphone was even switched off. "You didn't let me talk on the farm bills, vote chori, SIR, China, on (Gen) Naravane's book, Epstein. I want a one-on-one debate. I don't want a debate entailing long speeches," Gandhi said.

There is evidence of all my allegations in my phone... The one-on-one debate will prove who is working at the behest of foreign forces: Rahul Gandhi

"I want that Narendra Modi makes allegations against me and I do the same to him. He can come; there will be a table, on one side there will be Narendra Modi ji and on the other side, it will be me."

Gandhi also said that he had no objection if Adani Group chairperson Gautam Adani or RSS chief Mohan Bhagwat was appointed as the judge for the debate. "But I guarantee that the prime minister will not remain the PM after a one-on-one debate with me."

Gandhi also said that Modi was no longer attacking him because he was feeling pressured. "Notice something: there is a little fear in his (PM Modi's) mind because he is no longer commenting about me; he is no longer attacking me; he is being very, very careful. There is a reason for it,," he said.

In a statement after Gandhi's remark, Union Minister of State for Consumer Affairs, Food and Public Distribution of India B L Verma said, "We call it a serious allegation when there is evidence to support it. This is not the first time. Rahul Gandhi has made many allegations, but there is no substance in them... I want to tell Rahul Gandhi that unless you have evidence or proof of something, you have no right to make any allegations."

Congress leader Ashok Gehlot meets former V-P Jagdeep Dhankhar at AIIMS Delhi

In Sight

THREE DAYS since its release on November 10, Congress leader Sonia Gandhi's memoir — 'Belonging: A journey of love' — has been the talk of the town. A copy of the book was also spotted on the bedside table of former Vice President Jagdeep Dhankhar, who is recovering at AIIMS after he collapsed during a morning walk on Wednesday. Former Rajasthan CM Ashok Gehlot, who visited Dhankhar at the hospital on Friday, shared a photo of the meeting on X in which the book could be seen.

Tea Types

UNION SPORTS Minister Mansukh Mandaviya recently interacted with a group of youth during a roundtable where Gujarati tea was served. He opened a discussion on various types of tea served in different parts. Mandaviya termed Gujarati tea as 'strong', and others joined with their inputs, citing salt tea from Leh, black Kattan tea from Kerala, and Osmania tea from Hyderabad.

Meeting Point

BJP CIRCLES are abuzz with speculation around a meeting of the Council of Ministers scheduled to take place after PM Narendra Modi's return from a two-day visit to the Philippines next week. Some insiders believe that the meeting will be just a stock-taking exercise to appraise the ongoing government schemes, similar to the one presided over by the PM in September. However, others see the possibility of a reshuffle among the existing ranks of Ministers of State, which may undergo 'significant changes' in the event of a rejig in the Cabinet.

Why win in Maharashtra's biggest dairy Gokul unsettled sections of BJP, Shiv Sena

Shubhangi Khapre & Vallabh Ozarkar
Mumbai, November 13

Mahayuti supporters outside Gokul dairy. SHUBHAM KURALE

THE MAHAYUTI'S recent win in Maharashtra's biggest dairy Gokul — weeks after it lost an election there to the Opposition — has not gone down well in sections of both the BJP and ally Shiv Sena.

NCP leader Rajesh Patil was elected Gokul's chairman 16 votes to 13 on November 10, days after the government passed an ordinance giving four directors nominated by it voting rights. These votes helped the ruling alliance overcome the vote deficit that had seen it lose the election to the dairy's board 12 votes to 13 on October 19.

While the concern among some in the BJP, especially the local leadership, is that the developments in Gokul may dent the party's image and that the NCP cannot be trusted — The Indian Express spoke to a dozen party leaders, including ministers, office-bearers, and grassroots activists — many Sena leaders are worried about the consequences it will have on its organisation in western Maharashtra. The dairy is located in the region's Kolhapur district.

"The consensus that emerged from the discussions in the party on Gokul is that CM Devendra Fadnavis unnecessarily allowed himself to get embroiled in the issue under pressure from the NCP. In the end, the BJP emerged badly bruised and beaten. Moreover, the Congress capitalised and turned a local issue into a national one by alleging vote chori," said a senior BJP functionary.

A senior office-bearer said, "In Gokul, the party appeared more focused on maintaining the alliance's unity than on consolidating its own influence."

"Securing control of a cooperative institution as well as strengthening one's political organisation are two different achievements. In Gokul, the Mahayuti secured the former, but the BJP fell short on the latter. It calls for balancing between alliance politics, grassroots leadership, and independent party groups," said a party insider.

Local BJP leaders pointed fingers at senior Cabinet ministers Chandrakant Patil of the BJP and Hasan Mushrif of NCP, saying their dominance drove the contest, and the grassroots leaders were ignored. They pointed to how a Gokul director in previous tenure, Shoumika Mahadik of the BJP, had been ignored this time. Shoumika is married to Kolapur South MLA Amal Mahadik.

"For five years, Shoumika Mahadik raised issues concerning the union's functioning and helped the BJP establish a political presence in the cooperative sector. But during the election campaign, she was not projected prominently as the party's principal local face. The emphasis on senior leaders overshadowed the politics," said a local BJP functionary. This time, Shoumika lost by 121 votes, with BJP insiders saying that the party's failure to convert her five-year struggle into broader organisational strength is a significant aspect of its electoral setback.

Some local BJP leaders questioned Chandrakant Patil, blaming his spat with Congress MLC Satej Patil — whose panel lost to the Mahayuti in the chairman election — for diverting attention from voters' concerns such as milk procurement prices, cattle-feed costs, collection systems, and the financial interests of affiliated societies. The Opposition focused on promises of higher milk prices, reduced cattle-feed costs, and retaining local control over Gokul, thereby managing to win the board poll.

Though Independent MLA Shivajirao Patil, supported by BJP, cautioned the party against taking decisions on Kolhapur politics based on the advice of outsiders — his criticism was directed at ally Jan Surajya Shakti Paksha's (JSSP) state president Samit Kadam, who hails from Sangli — he was not heeded, claimed some local BJP leaders.

Of the 12 director seats that the Mahayuti won in the October 19 poll, two were bagged by the BJP (out of seven it contested); the NCP and the Sena won four each (they contested nine and seven seats, respectively); and two went to the JSSP. The BJP subsequently blamed its allies for its defeat in five seats.

Mushrif said the government decision was taken to remove the deadlock and there was no other interest. "Now this matter is closed," he said, clarifying the focus would now be on expanding Gokul and figuring out how to compete with Amul. Mushrif alleged that some leaders in the alliance were trying to create rifts and that "care must be taken to ensure no disputes arise among the three parties".

Gokul has an annual turnover of thousands — nearly Rs 4,000 crore in 2024-25 — and its network connects the cooperative leadership with village-level societies and thousands of milk-producing families across the state. The cooperative is associated with nearly 4.41 lakh milk producers, collecting milk through 8,009 village-level primary societies in an estimated 1,810 villages. This makes it a crucial financial as well as political institution and the BJP cannot ignore discontent among its rank and file in the region.

Also, according to a source, "Gokul had nearly 3,600 institutions in its first 50 years, but 1,800 additional institutions were registered in subsequent years. This unprecedented growth raised concerns about the need for a thorough scrutiny of their eligibility and authenticity, particularly to identify institutions established primarily to secure voting rights."

BJP leaders said many of these institutions were allegedly set up when Satej Patil, Mushrif, and Sena leaders were in control of Gokul and part of the Opposition Maha Vikas Aghadi alliance, starting in 2021. This led to concerns about possible cross-voting driven by individual interests rather than alliance commitments, but the BJP leadership did not pursue a stringent scrutiny process in order to fix the potential vulnerabilities in the electoral process, local party leaders said.

Several Sena leaders said that going against the interests of those associated with the dairy could affect the party's electoral prospects in the region. "Gokul has nearly 5 lakh milk producers associated with it. Its network reaches villages across the district. Hurting the interests of these people could affect our electoral prospects. It would send a wrong message across Maharashtra that the ruling alliance cannot even accept one defeat and is willing to go to any extent to take control of a dairy," a Sena leader said.

The Sena won Radhanagari, Karvir, and Kolhapur North in the 2024 Assembly polls — Kolhapur has 10 Assembly constituencies — and retaining this rural support is important as it tries to strengthen its presence in western Maharashtra.

The discomfort in the Sena had found public expression through party MLA Ravindra Dhangekar, who told The Indian Express on November 7, "There should be no attempt to forcibly capture power at Gokul. We must live up to democratic norms."

Sena leader and Kolhapur Guardian Minister Prakash Abitkar, however, denied any discontent in the party over the developments in Gokul, saying the "Mahayuti remains united".

'Neo-middle class top priority of govt': Modi inaugurates Pink Line of Bengaluru Metro

Bengaluru, November 13

PRIME MINISTER Narendra Modi on Friday inaugurated the Bengaluru Metro's 7.5-km-long Pink Line, making Bengaluru the third city in the country to have an operational network of over 100 km. The Metro authorities announced that operations would start from Saturday.

Modi unveiled an elevated section of the Pink Line that connects Kalena Agrahara and Tavarekere. Part of the 21.25-km corridor, the stretch opened after multiple missed deadlines and a six-year delay. "In 2014, Namma Metro was only 17-km-long. Today, its network spans over 100 km. We are continuously scoring centuries," he said.

The PM said that expanding modern public transport in the Bengaluru region is a top government priority, adding that the rise of the "neo-middle class" has become a major engine of India's growth. "A new aspirational class is emerging... They want refrigerators and washing machines in their homes, scooters and bikes for their families. They want better education, nutrition and health facilities for their children... These rising aspirations are creating new demand in the country... In other words, this neo-middle class is becoming a major engine of growth for India's economy. The interests of this neo-middle class — present in large numbers in Karnataka and Bengaluru — are among the priorities of the Government."

Meanwhile, state Chief Minister D K Shivakumar outlined Bengaluru's ambition to expand its Metro network to 500 km. He also urged the PM to introduce a more equitable Centre-state funding mechanism for Metro rail projects, expedite approvals and share the financial burden of infrastructure development.

He said that although Metro projects were structured as 50:50 partnerships between the Centre and states, the actual financial burden on states was considerably higher. "The benefits of Metro are shared by everyone. So, the financial responsibility must also be shared fairly."

Modi also unveiled the Vande Bharat train from Bengaluru to Madgaon (Goa) via Mangaluru.

● DRIVE TO BEGIN ON NOVEMBER 20; ADDING BACK 40 LAKH TO 80 LAKH VOTERS SHOULD SUFFICE, SAYS A BJP LEADER

'Antim mauka': In UP, BJP sets target for restoring deleted Hindu voters

Lalmani Verma
Lucknow, November 13

DAYS AFTER Uttar Pradesh Chief Minister Yogi Adityanath claimed that 1.27 crore Hindus had been excluded from the state's electoral rolls and the number of Muslim voters had increased by 1.65% during the Special Intensive Revision (SIR) of electoral rolls, the BJP has urged its leaders to work on a war footing to ensure that most of these names are added back to the voter list during the ongoing Special Summary Revision (SSR) of the rolls, The Indian Express has learnt.

The 1.27 crore figure across UP's 403 Assembly constituencies comes up to an average of just over 31,000 such voters allegedly excluded from the rolls in each seat. The BJP has set its district leaders a target to ensure that 10,000 to 25,000 such voters in each constituency are added back to the rolls, sources said, adding this translates to at least 50 voters in each polling booth. The drive is expected to begin on November 20, three days after the SSR draft rolls are published.

The target was conveyed to BJP district presidents and incharges at a meeting in Lucknow on Friday. Adityanath, his deputy Keshav Prasad Maurya, and state BJP chief Pankaj Chaudhary addressed the meeting. Sources said the party decided not to "undertake any other programme" over the next month and instead completely focus on updating the voter list. "Even if we succeed in adding back 40 lakh to 80 lakh voters, that should suffice," said a leader.

Leaders privy to the discussions said Adityanath had labelled the next month "antim mauka (last chance)" to bring back these eligible voters and emphasised that opportunity should not be missed. While the draft rolls after this special summary revision are scheduled to be released on November 17, the claims and objections period will run until December 16. The electoral rolls are scheduled to be published on January 4, 2027.

The CM also directed party leaders to compare the Assembly voter lists with the electoral rolls for panchayat polls and the list of government welfare scheme beneficiaries to figure out who had been left out of the Assembly election rolls. While the Election Commission of India (ECI) prepares the rolls for the Assembly polls, the State Election Commission (SEC) prepares the rolls for the panchayat polls.

For the BJP leadership, the concern is that the party won several seats in the 2022 Assembly polls by 1,500-3,000 votes and if the rolls shrink by even 5,000-10,000 voters, it could bring these constituencies into play. Sources said Maurya has told those at the meeting that the difference between the BJP and the Samajwadi Party (SP) was 1.55 crore votes in 2017 and this shrank to 85 lakh in 2022.

This makes the number flagged by the CM a matter of concern, sources said. "If we consider the data of 1.27 crore names, their average deletion is 31,513 votes per Assembly constituency, which is a significant number. So, the party has set a goal to reach out to left out eligible voters and bring back to the rolls an average of 10,000-25,000 names," said a senior BJP leader.

Sources further said that the BJP had decided to focus on the voters who have shifted to another constituency in the state or have migrated to another state. There will also be an emphasis on including more women and youth in the rolls.

"During SIR, a sizable number of urban voters opted to shift to their rural addresses. This created a problem for the party in urban regions, which have been its traditional zone of strength. We will speak to such voters and help them fill forms to shift back to the urban seats. Similarly, people who migrated to other states and got enrolled as voters there will be requested to shift their votes back to UP," said a BJP office-bearer. "The gender ratio in the existing roll is 834 and the party's assessment is that lots of women were left out or their names were deleted for various reasons during SIR. If they are eligible, the party will help them get enrolled."

"The party will not pay much attention to the Muslim-dominated seats it never wins. We will deploy our workers in the constituencies where Hindu voters were deleted in large numbers during SIR and which we can win if their names are restored," said the leader.

"The BJP will hold district and Assembly-level meetings by November 19 to discuss the strategy with ground-level workers. From November 20, our leaders and booth-level agents will fan out across booths," said a leader who attended the Friday meeting with Adityanath.

'Intensifying' El Niño to persist until March 2027; strongest ever since 1950, says NOAA

Express News Service
New Delhi, November 13

EL NIÑO will continue to remain 'strong' to 'very strong' during the first quarter of 2027, the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) said on Thursday.

The UN organisation further said that the current El Niño event continues to intensify, and would become the "strongest ever since 1950". It is set to shatter all previously known records with respective to the sea surface temperatures along the equatorial Pacific Ocean.

El Niño is a naturally occurring phenomenon associated with warm seas along the equatorial Pacific Oceans. El Niño alters rain patterns, spikes temperatures, increases incidents of wild fires, leads to extreme weather in the form of fluids or droughts across the world.

It is one of the three phases of the El Niño Southern Oscillation (ENSO), the other two being ENSO neutral and La Nina (cool). The ENSO phase is subject to the Relative Ocean Nino Index (RONI) value — the sea surface temperature measured over the Nino 3.4 region. An El Niño event is declared when the average RONI value surpasses 0.5 degree Celsius, an average considered over three months.

"The chances for a historic event exceeding previous El Niños dating back to 1950 (+2.5 degrees Celsius or more) are now around 60% for the October-December and November-January periods," the NOAA said.

Since October, the sea surface temperature recorded farther to the west across the equatorial Pacific Ocean exceeded 4 degrees Celsius — the first ever confirmed since 1950s when the data gathering commenced. The World Meteorological Organisation (WMO) had, in October this year, warned of off-the-charts temperature values to emerge, which now stands confirmed.

• WRITEBACK

RESPONDING TO The Indian Express report 'Adani slashes its Maharashtra power project cost by 99%, its forest dues plummet; Centre orders probe', Adani Green Energy Ltd said the allegation that AGEL sought to revise project costs downwards to diminish statutory obligations is completely misleading.

In a statement, Adani Green Energy Ltd said, "The online proposal in the Forest/ wildlife portal was solely for site investigation purposes, while SBWL (State Board for Wildlife) considered total project costs of Rs 5,675 crore. Since site investigation costs are around 1% of project costs, therefore clarification of the project Rs 56.75 crore representing solely the site investigations and survey costs, for the online proposal was provided."

"Secondly, the allegation that downward revision was intended to lower conservation costs is false. The Tarali PSP is situated entirely on private, non-forest land and 3.2 kms away from the Koyna wildlife sanctuary. It is outside the notified buffer zone of Sahyadri Tiger reserve and in no way impacts or fringes upon the tiger corridor or any notified ESZ (Eco-Sensitive Zone). The project does not cause diversion of any protected areas, any reserve forest or notified Eco Sensitive zone," it said.

THE INDIAN EXPRESS RESPONDS

A letter from Deputy Director, Koyna Wildlife Sanctuary, Sahyadri Tiger Reserve, to Adani Green Energy Limited on May 7, 2026, clearly mentions that the Tarali Pump Storage Project is located in the "deemed eco-sensitive zone" of the sanctuary.

In this letter, he refers to the February 23, 2026 meeting of the standing committee of the State Board for Wildlife (SBWL) in which 15 conditions were laid for the company while endorsing the project.

Referring to the first condition, the letter said, "Cost of the project passing through the buffer/deemed eco-sensitive zone of Koyna Wildlife Sanctuary is Rs 5,675 crores and its 4% amounting to Rs 227 crores should be deposited in the bank account of Field Director of Sahyadri Tiger Reserve."

Earlier, on March 24, 2026, the Principal Chief Conservator of Forest (PCCF), Maharashtra, sent a letter to Adani Green Energy Limited, listing all 15 conditions laid down by the SBWL.

This letter also mentions the condition that 4% of the cost of the project passing through the "deemed eco-sensitive zone of Koyna Wildlife Sanctuary" should be deposited to the Sahyadri Tiger Reserve.

After stating all 15 conditions in the letter, the PCCF asks the company to deposit Rs 227 crores, which is 4% of the project cost of Rs 5,675 crores, to Sahyadri Tiger Reserve Conservation Foundation.

On September 8 this year, Adani Green Energy Chief Operating Officer Naresh Telgu submitted the notarised affidavit about the project cost to the Maharashtra PCCF "As stated in the enclosed affidavit, while submitting Part IV of the proposal, the project cost was considered based on an analogous estimation. We respectfully request that project cost mentioned herein may kindly be considered for the subject proposal."

The notarised affidavit states: "While submitting the part IV the cost of the project is considered based on analogous estimation, we considered as INR 56.75 crore, request you to please consider the same as project cost."

It is only after this affidavit that the PCCF again writes to Adani Green Energy on October 12, 2026, that the revised project cost of Rs 56.75 crore has been accepted. The letter then asks the company to immediately deposit 1% (Rs 56.75 lakh) and pay the remaining 3% (Rs 1.7075 crore) upon National Board for Wildlife approval.

Adani project cost cut a 'scandal', says Congress; Shiv Sena (UBT) claims it's destroying Sahyadri

Pune, November 13

INDIA BLOC partners Congress and Shiv Sena (UBT) on Friday said The Indian Express report on Adani Green Energy slashing its project cost by 99% pointed to a "scandal", and said pump storage projects were destroying the Sahyadris.

Sharing The Indian Express report on his X handle, Congress general secretary in-charge communications Jairam Ramesh said the project cost revision was a "scandal of gigantic proportions". He reiterated an earlier demand of his party to set up a JPC probe into Adani Group's operations. "A project which was sanctioned last year for Rs 5,675 crore is now stated in an affidavit to have a cost of Rs 56.75 crore. It is a 99% reduction!!! This is unbelievable.... It points to a scandal of gigantic proportions reinforcing the demand for a JPC into its operations," he wrote in his post.

In another post on X, Congress MLA and former Leader of Opposition in Maharashtra Vijay Wadettiwar, asked CM Devendra Fadnavis whether the government was purposefully ignoring this matter. "When the Central government's environmental clearance explicitly stated the project cost as Rs 5,675 cr, who permitted the company to alter this cost (to Rs 56.75 cr), and on what basis was that permission granted? Who exactly is behind reducing the Rs 227 cr earmarked for wildlife conservation down to a mere Rs 2.27 cr?"

Shiv Sena (UBT) MLA Aditya Thackeray also posted on X and said pump storage projects were destroying the Sahyadris. Sharing The Indian Express report, he wrote, "They loot our State, Plunder our forests, Don't even want to pay the dues... Why shouldn't Maharashtra rise up against this loot? Why should Maharashtra allow this plunder? In any case, Pump Storage projects are destroying the Sahyadris! CM must reject this. Bring in Battery Storage projects!"

20-yr-old IIT-Roorkee student dies by suicide, institute postpones exam

Vidheesha Kuntamalla
Dehradun, November 13

A 20-YEAR-OLD student of the Indian Institute of Technology (IIT) Roorkee died by suicide in his hostel room on Thursday evening, prompting the institute to postpone examinations scheduled for Friday and arrange counselling support for students on campus, The Indian Express has learnt.

Ayush Rajoria, a second-year student of the BS-MS programme in Mathematics and Computing in the Department of Mathematics, hailed from Ghaziabad.

A member of the IIT Roorkee administration told The Indian Express on condition of anonymity that Rajoria had been seeking help at the institute's wellness centre.

Describing him as academically bright, the official said Rajoria had scored a CGPA of 9 out of 10 in his first semester, which subsequently fell to around 7 in the second semester.

His parents arrived on the campus after being informed of his death. SSP Haridwar Navneet Singh Bhullar said police received information about the incident through the 112 emergency service late Thursday night.

The police reached the hostel and found the student's room locked from inside. After gaining entry into the premises, they recovered his body. "Inquest and post-mortem procedures are currently underway. A detailed suicide note was discovered on the student's computer; the police will examine it and take further action in accordance with the law," Bhullar said.

The institute on Friday said the circumstances surrounding the incident were being investigated by the police and that it was extending full cooperation to the authorities and support to the family.

Following the death, examinations scheduled on the campus on Friday were deferred. Officials at the institute said fresh dates would be announced shortly and that counselling and support were being provided to students. Rajoria's death comes amid a series of student suicides reported at the IITs across the country this year, renewing questions about academic pressure, campus isolation, and the adequacy of institutional mental-health support.

At least six student deaths by suicide have been reported on IIT campuses in 2026.

Himachal announces Rs 1,500 monthly aid, 300 units free power for women aged 18-59 yrs

Shimla, November 13

AROUND 3.50 LAKH eligible women aged between 18 and 59 years are set to receive a monthly financial assistance of Rs 1,500 and 300 units of free electricity after the Himachal Pradesh Cabinet, chaired by Chief Minister Sukhvinder Singh Sukhu, on Friday accorded its approval for the launch of the 'Mukhya Mantri Apna Parivar Sukhi Parivar Yojna' ahead of the Assembly elections due in the latter half of 2027.

Under the scheme, all eligible women in a family will receive monthly financial assistance, but only one member will be eligible for free electricity each month. For women above 59 years, the state government has already enhanced their monthly financial assistance from Rs 1,050 to Rs 1,500, according to a government spokesperson.

In another major decision, the Cabinet approved a uniform policy for determining and periodically revising rates for the sale of "surplus raw water" to neighbouring states, government agencies and industries. An initial benchmark rate of Rs 100 per 1,000 cubic feet will apply to all existing and future state projects, including inter-state water projects. The rates will be revised periodically in accordance with the Wholesale Price Index (WPI), according to the spokesperson.

The Cabinet also approved the launch of the 'Khelo Himachal Chitta Mukt Abhiyan-2026' across all 12 districts to engage young people in sports and strengthen the campaign against drug abuse.

In the power sector, the government approved amendments to the Swaran Jayanti Energy Policy-2021, providing 50 per cent free power royalty for the first 10 years after the completion of 40 years of operation of commissioned projects of the Central Public Sector Undertakings. These projects will be transferred to the state government free of cost after 50 years of commissioning.

The Cabinet also decided to cancel the allotment of 222 solar power projects due to prolonged non-implementation. Allotments of 13 hydroelectric projects of above 25 MW capacity were also cancelled for the violation of policy provisions, while 20 projects would be put up for fresh bidding, the spokesperson said.

To promote public transport, the Cabinet increased the subsidy from 30 to 40 per cent on the purchase of diesel buses under the Rajiv Gandhi Swarojgar Start-up Yojna -2023.

It also approved a 50 per cent subsidy on the purchase of electric buses and 40 per cent on diesel buses with more than 10 seats on identified routes connecting Hamirpur Bus Stand with Dr Radhakrishnan Government Medical College, Jolsapper, and the new OPD at IGMC, Shimla, with Atal Institute of Medical Super Speciality, Chamiyana, the spokesperson said.

Jharkhand Cong MLA booked for rape after 14-yr-old girl alleges assault, forced abortion

Shubham Tigga
Ranchi, November 13

In her complaint, the minor girl said the MLA had brought her from her house on the promise of providing her education

AN FIR has been registered under the Protection of Children against Sexual Offences (POCSO) Act against a Congress MLA following a complaint by a 14-year-old Adivasi girl alleging sexual assault at his residence in Ranchi. The complaint also includes allegations of physical assault, forced domestic labour and forced abortion.

According to the police, the complaint contains allegations of physical assault and rape against the MLA. In a complaint filed at Dhurwa Police Station, the minor girl said the MLA had brought her from her house on the promise of providing her education. She alleged that instead of being sent to school, she was made to do household work at the MLA's residence.

In her complaint, the minor alleged that she was sexually assaulted on August 5, threatened into silence and forced to abort her pregnancy. The MLA has denied the allegations, calling them a conspiracy by former Congress leaders "working with the Opposition".

He said the matter had reached senior Congress leaders and that he had been asked to cooperate with the investigation.

"Let the investigation begin. I will cooperate. The truth will come out," he said, adding that party leaders and workers had extended their support to him. But the allegations have sparked a row, with BJP state president Aditya Sahu demanding the immediate arrest of the MLA. Sahu also alleged that the girl's family had accused the MLA's relatives of assault, abuse, and physical and mental harassment.

Questioning the silence of Congress leaders Rahul Gandhi and Priyanka Gandhi Vadra, Sahu asked whether the party would take action against its MLA. He also questioned whether the ruling alliance would protect its political ally or ensure justice for the girl. "BJP would launch a statewide agitation if the MLA is not arrested immediately and the girl is not provided security," he warned.

Congress spokesperson Rakesh Sinha told The Indian Express that an FIR alone could not establish the allegations and that a conspiracy could not be ruled out. However, he said the matter was "sensitive, and the party would wait for the investigation".

Asked whether the party would discuss the matter, Sinha said that, due to Chhath Puja, which is the biggest and most important festival, no meeting was likely over the next two days. If anything adverse emerged against the MLA, he could be expelled from the party, he said.

Phoney election foisted on people in mid-winter, says Wangchuk

Naveed Iqbal
Srinagar, November 13

CLIMATE ACTIVIST Sonam Wangchuk has claimed that he has been placed under house arrest with dozens of uniformed men stationed outside his residence as well as institute in Leh.

On Thursday, he posted videos on social media purportedly showing him being moved from a tent where he was resting ahead of a protest against administration's decision to conduct the Ladakh Autonomous Hill Development Council (LAHDC) polls on December 4.

On Friday, Wangchuk said he attempted to leave his home but was stopped from doing so by police personnel posted outside his residence. "They may say this is an advice to stay home but clearly, I am not being allowed to move out," he said in a video.

As election approaches, nominations for which have already begun, social and political representatives in the region have begun to intensify protests against the conduct of the polls, citing harsh weather and migration of local residents to warmer climates. Kargil shut down for a day on November 8 while scores of people in Leh held a sit-in protest Thursday against the decision to hold polls "in such haste".

"Dozens of armed guards surround my house while the government version says 'I have been advised to stay at home'. All for asking uncomfortable questions like... why is the Judicial Enquiry Commission Report (of last year's killings in Leh) delayed and a phoney council election is foisted on people with rocket speed in mid-winter. Whole of Ladakh is in protest," Wangchuk said.

'No songs about drugs or alcohol, no calling kids on stage': Curbs on Diljit's Gujarat concert

Ritu Sharma
Ahmedabad, November 13

Diljit Dosanjh is set to perform in Ahmedabad on November 21

CHILD PROTECTION authorities in Gujarat have restricted Punjabi singer Diljit Dosanjh from performing songs centred around drugs or alcohol and calling children on to the stage. Dosanjh is slated to perform at the Narendra Modi Stadium in Ahmedabad on November 21 as part of his 'Aura India Tour'.

Ahmedabad District Child Protection Officer (DCPO) Tanvika Parmar has asked city police commissioner Anupamsingh Gahlaut to not allow Dosanjh to sing songs titled Patiala Peg, 5 Raara Theke, Jeb vicho feem labhi aa and Jatt Fire Karda. She has also asked Dosanjh not to wear bandoliers (bullet/cartridge belts) as depicted in promotional material for the Ahmedabad show.

Meanwhile, the Indore district child protection authorities have also placed similar restrictions on Dosanjh's concert in Madhya Pradesh on November 15 over concerns about child safety over songs and stage depiction.

"We have requested the police to not allow Diljit Dosanjh to sing these songs during his concert in Ahmedabad as these glorify alcohol consumption, narcotic substances and weapons and violence. The Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment is actively running the 'Nasha Mukt Bharat Abhiyaan' (Drug-Free India Campaign) so such songs cannot be allowed. The reference of Punjab and Haryana High Court's order is being given that such songs will have a bad impact on children," Ahmedabad DCPO Tanvika Parmar told The Indian Express on Friday.

The notice, issued on November 6, also seeks not to allow Diljit Dosanjh to call children on stage as they may be exposed to loud sound and flash lights which might impact children's eyes and ears.

"During the live show, sound levels exceeding 120 decibels (120 dB) along with rapidly changing illumination and lights (Flashing Lights, Spot/Beam Lights) are used on stage, which is hazardous to the health of young children; therefore, inviting children onto the stage is inappropriate. Wearing cartridge/bullet belts (bandoliers) strapped across the chest or imitation metallic cartridges during stage performances promotes violent activities and gun culture, which can negatively influence the audience as well as children," the notice says.

The head-on collision happened between a minibus and a container truck in the Rangajan area of Golaghat district. EXPRESS

AT LEAST 25 people died on Friday, and several others were injured in a collision that happened near Kaziranga National Park, senior government and police officers said.

The head-on collision happened between a minibus and a container truck in the Rangajan area of Golaghat district. The Assam Police said that the accident occurred around 2:30 pm, and, according to the preliminary investigation, the minibus was speeding.

According to a senior government official, at least 25 people had been declared dead as of 9 pm. Officials said that several of the injured were critical and the death toll might rise.

Swapnaneel Deka, Senior Superintendent of Police, Golaghat, told The Indian Express: "The forensic team has arrived at the accident site and are conducting the investigation. According to the preliminary investigation, it appears that rash and negligent driving was the cause of the accident."

A minor was among the injured who was being treated at Jorhat Medical College and Hospital, Deka said, adding that another minor had died. Among the victims were also three students who were travelling in the minibus, officials said.

Atul Bora, Assam Panchayat and Rural Development Minister, who was in the vicinity, rushed to the spot to oversee rescue operations.

"... Senior district and police officials are all on the spot, and further investigations will be carried out," Bora, who is also the local MLA, told The Indian Express. Bora also said that the driver of the minibus, which collided with the container, died on the spot.

According to officials, 11 people were from Golaghat district, one from Karbi Anglong and six others were from Nagaon district. Several were yet to be identified, officials said.

Assam Chief Minister Himanta Biswa Sarma said that the scale of the loss had "shaken all of us, and my heart goes out to every family that has lost a loved one."

Sarma further said that the state government's priority was to provide medical assistance to the injured "without delay".

"I pray for the swift recovery of the injured and for strength for the bereaved families," said Sarma, who is currently on a two-day official tour of Biswanath district.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi expressed anguish over the loss of lives and announced that an ex-gratia of Rs 2 lakh from PMNRF will be given to the next of kin of each of the deceased. PM Modi also announced that the injured would be given Rs 50,000.

In a post on X, President Droupadi Murmu said, "The news of deaths in a road accident in Kaziranga, Assam is deeply saddening. I express my heartfelt condolences to the families who have lost their loved ones in this accident and wish a speedy recovery to those who were injured."

Mahender Singh Manral
New Delhi, November 13

THE CENTRE on Friday declared the Islamic Research Foundation (IRF), founded by controversial preacher Dr Zakir Abdul Karim Naik, an unlawful association for a further five years, citing activities prejudicial to the security of the country and its potential to disturb communal harmony.

The Ministry of Home Affairs notification comes a day before the existing ban was due to cease.

"The IRF was first declared an unlawful association on November 17, 2016, and the prohibition was subsequently extended on November 15, 2021. Maithili Thakur & kin accused of land grab, encroachment cleared

Himanshu Harsh
Patna, November 13

POPULAR FOLK singer and BJP MLA Maithili Thakur has found herself in a controversy with her family being accused of encroachment and land grab on government road as well as private properties in Darbhanga district.

Even though allegations with regard to the private land remain to be examined, officials confirmed encroachment on government road in the form of a boundary wall and demolished it on Thursday.

Thakur has rejected the allegations against her family, claiming she was only building a home in her Alinagar constituency to hold public hearings. The dispute, however, has acquired political overtones with Opposition RJD alleging that legislators of the state's ruling NDA were "looting the public".

The matter pertains to Pokharbhinda village of Tardih block. Revenue officials, who measured the disputed site, found that the family had encroached on a portion of the road, said officials.

The action comes after several villagers approached the circle officer alleging encroachment on the government road, private plots, the land of the village deity 'Tiwari Baba', the Radhakrishna temple, a collective shraddhasthal (sacred spot), and a drain.

On Thursday, Deputy Collector Land Reforms (DCLR) Ajay Kumar and Circle Officer Alok Kumar visited the village with a team and got the land measured.

After the initial verification indicated encroachment on government road, the administration removed the construction, including bricks and a divider, and restored access to the road.

UP ATS asks Google to block 20L email accounts created by man arrested over hoax bomb threats

Manish Sahu
Lucknow, November 13

THE UTTAR Pradesh Anti-Terrorism Squad (ATS) has written to Google's Gmail office in California, seeking the blocking of over 20 lakh email accounts allegedly recovered from the laptop of 24-year-old Ankit Shankhwar, who was arrested last month for allegedly creating fake email IDs linked to a series of hoax bomb threats in Delhi-NCR and Mumbai last month.

Officials said Shankhwar allegedly used fictitious identities to create the accounts and sold them in bulk to anti-India elements based in Pakistan, Bangladesh and other countries in exchange for cryptocurrency.

A senior ATS officer said the agency has sent an online request, along with a covering letter, to Gmail, sharing a list of the accounts and seeking their blocking to prevent possible misuse. The ATS is also preparing to seek Shankhwar's police custody remand following the recovery of fresh evidence from his mobile phone and laptop. Shankhwar was arrested on October 28.

Police said he is an intermediate pass-out and had earlier worked in the share market. His father is an e-rickshaw driver and he is the youngest of three sons. Police sources said Shankhwar was using a second-hand laptop, which he had purchased from a local resident.

Officials said the case came to light after the ATS received intelligence about threatening emails being sent from a suspicious email ID, simenbriones9265@gmail.com, on October 12.

Officials said the emails, purportedly sent in the name of the Khalistan National Army-Babbar Khalsa, threatened bomb attacks on several schools in Gautam Buddh Nagar district, Delhi and Gurugram, a Delhi-NCR show by Punjabi singer Diljit Dosanjh, and the residence of a prominent Bollywood actor.

Another account, smithjohnson6889@gmail.com, was allegedly used to send a bomb threat to the Mumbai Mayor's Office on October 23, said officials. Following a technical examination of the email account, the ATS traced its access to Kanpur Nagar district and identified Shankhwar, a resident of the Ghatampur area, as the alleged mastermind.

A mobile phone and laptop were seized from him. An initial examination of the laptop revealed several Excel files and cryptocurrency wallets, along with nearly 5 lakh email IDs, the ATS said. Further examination of the devices led investigators to identify more than 20 lakh accounts.

During questioning, Shankhwar allegedly told the ATS that he had been creating fake email IDs since 2021, generating lakhs of accounts over the years. He would also sometimes buy existing email accounts, reset their passwords and sell them to others, officials claimed.

He allegedly used WiFi and proxy networks to create these email accounts, making it difficult to trace their actual users.

According to the ATS, Shankhwar told them that he bought and sold fake email IDs through Facebook groups dedicated to trading such accounts. It was through these groups that he allegedly established contact with individuals and groups in Pakistan, Bangladesh, Turkey, Egypt and other countries.

Groups clash over Bageshwar Baba's remarks on Lord Krishna in MP

Anand Mohan J
Bhopal, November 13

A CONTROVERSY over remarks by Bageshwar Dham head priest Dhirendra Krishna Shastri about Lord Krishna and Lord Ram escalated into a confrontation between rival groups in Madhya Pradesh's Chhatarpur district on Friday, with supporters of the leader blocking a highway and members of the Yadav Mahasabha attempting to march towards the shrine to stage a protest.

The situation turned tense in Brijpura, where Bageshwar Dham supporters blocked the four-lane National Highway-39, bringing traffic to a standstill.

Police personnel were deployed in large numbers.

Yadav Mahasabha members had announced a protest against Shastri, demanding action over his alleged remarks on Lord Krishna and threatening to lock down Bageshwar Dham. The counter-mobilisation by the religious leader's supporters, however, turned the planned demonstration into a major law-and-order challenge for the district administration.

Police detained several Yadav Mahasabha workers and took them away in vehicles as tensions mounted. Members of the organisation also attempted to breach police barricades, prompting the administration to tighten security arrangements.

"Keeping today's programme in view, local police personnel, forces from outside and station in-charges from other police stations have been called here. Multiple layers of barricading have also been put in place to ensure that no situation arises that could pose a challenge to law and order. Discussions have been held with the organisers and all parties concerned. The programme is being conducted with everyone's consent, and we will ensure that peace in the city and the district is not disturbed," SP Rajat Saklecha said.

Confrontation between supporters of Dhirendra Shastri and the Yadav Mahasabha brought traffic on NH-39 to a standstill. EXPRESS

On inflammatory social media posts, the SP said, "Some people had posted objectionable comments on social media late yesterday (Thursday) afternoon. Most of them have been deleted, and the individuals concerned have been bound down and served notices to ensure that no social disharmony is spread..."

The administration has also made it clear that protests must be held after obtaining the requisite legal permission.

The confrontation unfolded as supporters of Bageshwar Dham and the Yadav Mahasabha traded accusations over the controversy. While the latter accused Shastri of hurting religious sentiments through his remarks on Lord Krishna, supporters of the preacher alleged that the protest was an attempt to create divisions among Hindus.

The immediate trigger was a speech by Shastri during a Ram Katha programme in Karera in Shivpuri district on October 29, in which he compared the forms and attributes of Lord Ram and Lord Krishna.

Shastri referred to Lord Krishna's tribhanga posture, in which he stands bent at three places, and contrasted it with Lord Ram's straight posture. He also made remarks about Lord Krishna playing the flute and tending to cattle, while associating Lord Ram with the bow and the arrow.

The remarks drew objections from members of the Yadav community, who regard Lord Krishna as a central figure of their religious and cultural identity. Organisations representing the community alleged that the comparison belittled Lord Krishna and hurt the religious sentiments of his devotees.

Ankita Bhandari case: Actor who alleged VIP link to take narco test

Vidheesha Kuntamalla
Dehradun, November 13

A DEHRADUN court has ordered actor Urmila Sanawar to undergo narco-analysis and polygraph examinations as part of the investigation into an audio recording in which a purported conversation refers to a "VIP" in connection with the 2022 murder of 19-year-old Ankita Bhandari.

The tests are to be conducted in Gandhinagar, Gujarat. While the date for the polygraph examination is yet to be fixed, Sanawar appeared before the court on Friday and is expected to undergo a medical examination before being taken to Gujarat.

The court's order comes amid renewed scrutiny of recordings released by Sanawar in December 2025, in which she claimed a politically influential person was linked to the murder. Sanawar has identified Dushyant Kumar Gautam, the current Governor of Sikkim, as the alleged VIP. Gautam has denied the allegations and accused Sanawar and others of circulating fabricated recordings to damage his reputation.

Ankita Bhandari, a 19-year-old receptionist at the Vanantra Resort in Rishikesh, was murdered on September 18, 2022. Her body was recovered from the Chilla canal on September 24. The resort was owned by Pulkit Arya, son of former BJP leader Vinod Arya. According to the prosecution, Pulkit and his two employees, Saurabh Bhaskar and Ankit Gupta, killed Bhandari after she resisted pressure to provide "special services" to guests at the resort. All three were convicted by a Pauri court in May 2025 and sentenced to life imprisonment.

The case had triggered widespread protests across Uttarakhand, with questions raised over the initial handling of Bhandari's disappearance by the local revenue police, the demolition of part of the resort and demands for an independent investigation.

SALUTE THE SOLDIER

On this day in 1971, we passed out from the Indian Military Academy and went straight into war. Some of our colleagues laid down their lives during that war, while others did so during the other challenges faced by our Armed Forces in subsequent years. Today, we pay homage to our colleagues from the three Services who did not complete the journey with us.

Inflation is settling in. Now, interest rate hike

THE LATEST consumer price index (CPI) numbers for October — a year-on-year increase of 6.09 per cent overall and 8.94 per cent for food — carry a sobering message. Retail inflation, the highest since the 6.21 per cent of October 2024 and above the Reserve Bank of India's (RBI) 6 per cent upper tolerance limit, is getting generalised. This is even more so in food, where the annual price rise is the highest since the 9.04 per cent of November 2024. The generalisation of inflation — businesses progressively passing through higher costs to consumers — is borne out, for example, by the expenses of eating out: In January 2026, inflation in "food and beverage serving services" in restaurants was just 2.88 per cent. Nine months on, that annual rate was 10.09 per cent, a reflection of costlier cooking fuel and food feeding on one another.

For the RBI, the choices are limited. It isn't whether but how much to raise interest rates at its Monetary Policy Committee meeting early next month. If price pressures are elevated and broadening, as they seem to be, a mere 25 basis point hike in its current policy repo rate of 5.5 per cent may not be enough. True, Brent crude prices have softened to $95-96 per barrel, from the $118 levels of October-end. The rupee, too, has strengthened to 94.2-to-the-dollar after threatening to breach the 97-mark early last month. But that comfort on the external front — thanks to renewed hopes of diplomatic resolution to end the conflicts in Iran and Ukraine — is being offset by the effects of El Niño. India's last episode of high food inflation during July 2023 to December 2024, when it averaged over 8.5 per cent year-on-year, was courtesy of a "strong" El Niño event. The present one is "super strong" and forecast to persist through January-March 2027.

If inflation, especially food, is the biggest risk to the economy today — derailing an otherwise visible consumption and investment momentum — the policy responses have to be appropriate. While the RBI can do its part to anchor inflation expectations on the demand side, the government has an equal role through supply-side management. Given that virtually every agricultural item today — be it edible oils, pulses and milk or maize, cotton and sugar — is domestically supply-constrained, allowing imports at low, if not nil, duties should be a no-brainer. In situations like this, market intelligence and timing matter. Delayed decision-making ultimately has both economic and political costs -- which the government would want to avoid.

100 chess grandmasters, and counting

WITH ANUJ Shrivatri becoming a grandmaster on Sunday, India crossed the 100-GM threshold in chess. Not many countries in the world can boast of those numbers. It was another sign of the nation's rising heft in the sport. In recent years, India has had an 18-year-old world champion in the form of Gukesh, two Olympiad teams that have swept their way to gold medals, and R Vaishali is set to fight for the Women's World Championship title early next year, the most prestigious title in women's chess.

Having 100 grandmasters in a country is not just a mere statistic. It will mean that the ecosystem of the sport itself will grow, because many of these grandmasters will soon branch out into coaching or will become seconds (aides who help with strategies for openings), just like their predecessors like Srinath Narayanan, R B Ramesh, Vishnu Prasanna and Shyam Sundar M — all of them grandmasters who turned into elite coaches early in their careers. Those four men have given the country the likes of Gukesh, Praggnanandhaa, Vaishali, Arjun Erigaisi and more by moulding them early on. It was thanks to the ready expertise of these grandmaster-turned-coaches that India went from having 65 grandmasters just before the pandemic in 2020 to having 100 in only six more years. The pace establishes India's stature as one of the fastest-growing nations in the sport.

Chances are that India will blitz its way from 100 to 200 grandmasters. The world has been dazzled by the talent of India's golden generation of Gukesh, Vaishali, Praggnanandhaa, Arjun Erigaisi and Divya Deshmukh. The generation that will follow is already showing signs that it's ready for the big stage. One only needs to look at the recent Chola Chess tournament in Chennai to get a measure of the potential of that generation. Young stars like Viresh Sharnarthi, Aarit Kapil, Sarbartho Mani and Madhvendra Pratap Sharma, who are not even international masters, a title just below the grandmaster level, held strong grandmasters to draws and occasionally prevailed. What is also heartening about India's century in chess is that the sport's reach is widening away from the traditional nerve centres like Tamil Nadu. Mayank Chakraborty, India's 94th GM, was not just Assam's but also Northeast India's first-ever grandmaster, while Shrivatri was Madhya Pradesh's first GM.

Bonobos, starring in and as themselves

OF THE three most intelligent great apes, the one that revels in its own brilliance is quite obsessed with the other two. Perhaps language and the capacity for higher-order thinking are to blame. They have made human beings narrative-making creatures, and the lives of others are treated as mere metaphors to understand Homo sapiens' own past and present. Take the poor bonobo. Since it was classified as a species separate from the chimpanzee in 1933, it has borne the burden of proving that human beings aren't all that bad.

A research paper in Current Biology adds to the vast body of work around bonobos that shows they defy the simplistic frameworks that people have tried to cage them in. In the first years after they were studied, bonobos were dubbed the "loving ape" because they chose to resolve conflicts through grooming, compromise and dialogue in matriarchal social groups. They were also considered to have a more vegetarian diet. They were contrasted with chimps, seen as the more aggressive and might-is-right species, and were used to say that humans, too, perhaps, have less aggressive origins. The latest research now shows that bonobos do hunt quite a bit, and are led more often by females. Already, this is being cited as an argument against "man as hunter" theories about prehistoric humans.

Perhaps it's time to understand chimps and bonobos not as some kind of less-than-human animals that hold clues to Homo sapiens' past, but in themselves, with all their complexity. Or, à la Planet of the Apes, tell their stories about us. A bonobo may just think that the human is a creature hell-bent on its own destruction, even as it has greater comforts. And all its culture is just the fiddle Nero played while Rome burned.

Our magical thinking on pollution: Do annual rituals, hope you are immune

PRATAP BHANU MEHTA

AIR POLLUTION is deadly across India. Initially, we thought that the daily question, "What is the AQI today?" would be one step towards creating political pressure on the issue. But Delhi's obsession with the AQI number now hardly seems like a mechanism of accountability. It increasingly feels like it is turning each citizen into an individual monitoring his or her own daily dose of poison. There is the legendary story of King Mithridates, who, apparently as a toxicologist, monitored his own poison intake to develop immunity. But our monitoring of poison is now in the service of accepting a fait accompli. It is a measure of how low our expectations of life are: Breathing, walking, basic health, being outdoors no longer matter.

This exhausting feeling is reinforced by the surreal sense that fighting pollution seems more like a ritual incantation. The mist cannon in Delhi sprinkling water, the way you might think Ganga*jal* is purifying our sins. The anti-smog gun that feels more like a grating conch conceding defeat than one announcing battle. The tattered green nets on construction sites, more like a ritual thread than an effective way of keeping dust away. The road vacuum cleaners, few and far between, seem like the ritual sweeping of the sacrificial space. Waste management continues to be a disaster. The ritual tree-planting drive where saplings seem like a single forlorn tulasi plant even as the forest cover blows away. The obsession with Delhi's AQI numbers, as if Delhi was the sacred site, the rest of India be damned.

Then there is the usual hunt for the seasonal disruptors: The farmers, the firecrackers. The state gets to talk about visible, seasonal, short-duration events, without cleaning up the underlying environment. For critics of the state, stubble-burning bans or firecracker bans get to play victim. A public-health measure like a firecracker ban gets converted into another occasion for civilisational victimhood. Rather than asking the question — what would it take to live in an environment where burning firecrackers did not badly affect our health — we think of the ban itself as a kind of curse that will destroy our civilisation. This, too, is an annual ritual.

But the rituals get even more grotesque. India is an appallingly unequal society. This paper reported that a 15-day CAQM ban on construction ahead of Diwali left 70 per cent of daily-wage labourers in places like Gurugram and Manesar without any financial relief; workers who mostly work without any precaution against construction-related dust all year. The ban on small fires and "dirty energy" affects the poor, small businesses and eateries. Every regulation seems to first regulate the survival strategies of the poor. Jay Bhattacharya, director of the National Institutes of Health, US, had, during COVID, coined the resonant phrase "laptop class" to argue that many anti-COVID measures protected the laptop class while exposing ordinary workers to risks and costs. Arguably, this is more severe in the case of "anti-pollution" measures. Work-from-home measures might be designed to reduce the use of vehicles, and some services can indeed be performed from home. But it effectively signals that the disproportionate burden will again fall on the poor. It is curious how much environmentalism is experienced as the policing of the poor. This is perhaps why there is little public support or demand for a lot of environmental measures.

> This exhausting feeling is reinforced by the surreal sense that fighting pollution seems more like a ritual incantation. The mist cannon in Delhi sprinkling water. The anti-smog gun that feels more like a grating conch conceding defeat than one announcing battle

India's anti-pollution measures are not just in the realm of magical thinking or policing the poor. The government has rolled out several major initiatives: Clean energy, transition to EVs, etc. The national clean air programme covers over a hundred cities. Many industries have been converted to cleaner fuels, and polluting industries relocated. There are questions about whether they are scaled up to the task at hand; whether we want to invest in the kind of state capacity that can make these schemes work. Increasingly, federalism is turning out to be a bigger challenge for India's environmental ambitions. Ecological boundaries or airsheds do not coincide with political boundaries, and essentially every jurisdiction wants to externalise the costs to another state or shift blame.

It has also to be said that there is simply no political demand or pressure in most states apart from Delhi for any environmental measures. But you do wonder whether even in Delhi cleaning the air is a priority. One of the more exciting schemes announced was Parivartan, where the government will give subsidies to replace commercial vehicles with BS VI standard vehicles or transition to EVs. But the scheme is confined to the NCR. There is an obvious case for beginning in the NCR, where the crisis is acute. But the lack of national strategy will haunt us. More fundamentally, we still seem to be learning the wrong lesson. Even in areas where pollution is not as severe as in the NCR, we need to price in environmental externalities and think of new designs for transport systems rather than simply dump Delhi's vehicles elsewhere. The transition to cleaner commercial transport should not have to wait for 1,000-plus AQI. We made that mistake once.

As of today, only 56,000 vehicles have been registered under the scheme, and only a few hundred operators have actually availed themselves of the subsidy. Apparently, the subsidy on offer is still insufficient to make the conversion financially viable. This points to a familiar problem, be it stubble burning or old vehicles: Incentives are not scaled to objectives. But here one cannot help noticing the contrast between the assiduousness with which the government has made subsidies work for PLI schemes and its inability to make them work for environmental schemes. Its energy is still on the "production" side; the environment is the afterthought. For breathable air, do the annual rituals, and hope like Mithridates that you are immune to the poison.

Missing in fertility industry: Safeguards that work

SAROJINI NADIMPALLY

ON OCTOBER 31, Hyderabad police reportedly rescued 43 women from an alleged egg-donation trafficking network. The women were recruited from various states and were promised Rs 20,000-30,000 for each donation cycle. According to the police, the accused were linked to 23 IVF centres in the city. The police also seized Humog HP 150 IU, a prescription drug used for ovarian stimulation, along with two other drugs.

This is not an isolated incident. In 2022, a 16-year-old girl in Erode, Tamil Nadu, alleged that her family had forced her, over four years, to sell her eggs to hospitals in Tamil Nadu and other states. In 2023, four people were arrested in Varanasi for taking a 17-year-old to an IVF centre after tampering with her Aadhaar card and presenting her as a married woman. These cases reveal troubling commonalities: The involvement of brokers, the targeting of economically vulnerable women, the use of falsified documents, and fertility facilities that apparently overlook the circumstances in which women are recruited.

On paper, India protects egg donors well. Under Section 27 of the Assisted Reproductive Technology (Regulation) Act, 2021, only registered ART banks can screen donors and provide them to clinics. Clinics must source gametes only from those registered ART banks (Section 21(b)). A woman may donate only once in her life, only between the ages of 23 and 35, and no more than seven eggs may be retrieved from her.

The law also shuts out middlemen. Section 33 bars medical practitioners from using intermediaries to find donors. A first offence draws a fine of Rs 5-10 lakh, while a repeat offence draws three to eight years in prison and a fine of Rs 10-20 lakh. The law, therefore, does not permit brokers to procure women for egg donation.

Nevertheless, brokers continue to recruit women across state lines for egg donation. One possible reason is the gap between the demand for donor eggs and the limited pool of women legally eligible to donate. Also, the number of registered facilities and the estimated number actually operating vary considerably. As of October 31, the National ART and Surrogacy Registry listed 4,726 registered clinics and 940 banks. This is far below the academic estimate of around 40,000 clinics. How well is the law enforced? The government's own records offer little information. The Department of Health Research's 2025-26 annual report records the number of forms downloaded from the National Registry portal and the permissions granted, including no-objection certificates. But its chapter on assisted reproduction is silent on inspections, violations, or prosecutions. Enforcement appears only in the description of the functions of the Appropriate Authority. Even the system for collecting donor information from clinics and banks has so far only been piloted.

That gap is crucial. ART banks must keep donor records and update the National Registry. A functioning registry should show whether a woman has donated before and stop repeat retrievals, the safeguard that failed in Erode. Yet, little is known publicly about whether the Registry works, how often it is updated, or whether donor details are verified before each procedure.

Accountability also rests with the Boards. Since courts can take cognisance of offences under the Act only on complaints by the National or State Boards or their authorised officers (Section 35), enforcement rests largely with these bodies. Rule 5 of the ART Rules, 2022, requires these Boards to submit annual reports to the government, yet the DHR report includes nothing from the National Board. The Union Health Ministry should publish these reports, and states should disclose details of inspections, suspensions, complaints and violations.

The women recruited through brokers should be treated as witnesses, not accused. They must receive independent medical care, including monitoring for complications arising from hormone injections, as well as the 12-month health insurance coverage that Section 22(1)(b) of the Act requires.

The Hyderabad, Varanasi, and Erode cases came to light through police raids or individual complaints, not routine regulatory inspections. Unless regulators check donor registers and hold clinics accountable, police operations will end with only a few agents in custody, while the institutions facilitating the trade continue to operate.

India is eating its way to diabetes, calling it prosperity

SHASHANK R JOSHI

STOP THE pretence. India is not merely the diabetes capital of the world. It is the diabetes factory of the world. One hundred and one million Indians have diabetes and 136 million have prediabetes. In our cities, one in three adults is on the road to it. Children of 12 develop fatty liver that their grandfathers developed at 60. Major civilisations warned us about this. We ignored them all.

Vedic India: You are what you digest. Ahara was medicine. Agni, the digestive fire, was treated as sacred. Our ancestors ate with the Sun, finished dinner before sunset, and practised upavasa as a deliberate sitting near the divine. Food was fresh, seasonal, cooked, shared, and eaten slowly, with attention. We have inverted every rule. We have extinguished Agni and replaced it with acidity, bloating, insulin resistance, and visceral fat.

Greece: Hippocrates wrote that food should be medicine and walking man's best medicine. The Greeks placed gymnasiums beside temples. The body was sacred, gluttony a moral failure. Hippocrates would look at a modern Indian thali of refined flour, fried vegetables, sweetened curd, dessert, and a cola and call it what it is: A prescription for diabetes.

Rome: Rome did not fall only to barbarians. It fell to excess. Banquets became competitions in vomiting and re-eating. The elite grew obese, infertile, diabetic. Juvenal recorded the judgement: "We now suffer the evils of long peace. Luxury, more deadly than war, broods over the city." India is repeating the experiment.

Japan: Japan is one of the oldest and leanest nations. In Okinawa, the rule is Hara Hachi Bu: Eat until you are 80 per cent full and stop. India does the opposite. We force-feed guests. Adopt the 80 per cent rule and India would cut diabetes incidence by a third within a decade.

Maya and China: The Maya built a civilisation on maize. When that corn was refined, stripped of fibre, and turned into syrup and soda, it became poison. Their descendants in Mexico record some of the highest diabetes rates. India is replaying the tragedy with rice and wheat. We polished brown rice into white, whole wheat into maida, jaggery into refined sugar, and abandoned millets as "poor man's food". Ragi and bajra were discarded. Chinese medicine insists on balance: Too much heat, too much sweet, too much sitting produces disease. Confucius observed that going beyond is as wrong as falling short. Urban India has gone beyond, in sugar, salt, oil, portions and hours seated. A chair is more dangerous than a cigarette for a future diabetic.

We should all adopt simple lifestyle changes for prevention this World Diabetes Day, such as walking after the largest meal (if medically allowed). Leave the table slightly hungry and have millets, dal, sabzi and one fruit daily. Eat vegetables and dal first. Sleep before midnight and get seven hours' sleep. For the state: Screen every Indian over 30 for diabetes and prediabetes, screen every child with obesity, teach nutrition in schools with seriousness and ban junk-food advertising aimed at children.

Change the plate. Change the walk. Change the life. Or we will be remembered not as the land of yoga and ayurveda, but as the civilisation that knew how to live and chose to die eating. Health is the first wealth. Arogya Lakshmi. Sarve bhavantu sukhinah.

Optimism on SAARC

PROSPECTS FOR the success of the second summit of the South Asian Association for Regional Cooperation, hosted by India, brightened with the participants invoking the "SAARC spirit" of working together, keeping contentious bilateral issues out of the conference. Economic issues and the implementation of SAARC projects were highlighted at the opening day-meeting of the standing committee, the pre-summit exercise at the level of foreign secretaries.

Delhi doctors call off strike

THE JUNIOR doctors' strike that nearly brought the working of six major hospitals in the Capital to a halt was withdrawn after the government agreed to several demands. Junior residents and house surgeons will be paid Rs 2,400, Rs 2,475 and Rs 2,550 per month in the first, second and third years of their residency while senior residents will be given Rs 3,000, Rs 3,100 and Rs 3,200.

Newsprint backlog

THE GOVERNMENT has decided to release the entire accumulated backlog of unserviced newsprint from 1982-83 onwards in a phased manner, over three years, by the supply of indigenous newsprint. Information and Broadcasting Minister Ajit Panja said newspapers with an annual entitlement of up to 300 mt would have the option to take their entire requirement in the imported variety. The practice of requiring fresh applications to furnish bank guarantees has been dispensed with, he said.

Rajiv fails to remain incognito

THE BIG news of "Apna Utsav", the national cultural festival now lumbering into its sixth day, was an impromptu visit to one of the festival sites, Shahdara Jheel, by Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and his wife. However, Gandhi, who had hoped to mingle with the crowd incognito and watch the performances put on by the West Zone Cultural Centre, had to leave after 15 minutes as he was mobbed by enthusiastic crowds.

Amid the digital avalanche, childhood needs a protective umbrella

KRISHNA KUMAR

ILLUSTRATION: C R SASIKUMAR

WHO IS a child? The question was never easy to answer, partly because the term "child" is used in so many ways. In India, it applies to adults as well as real children. College and university teachers commonly refer to their students as "bachche". Meanwhile, real children and their education are routinely neglected and poorly planned. Neglect takes many forms, ranging from early indoctrination to the ill-conceived imposition of complex items of knowledge and devices. The smartphone is one such device. Mothers use it as a babysitter and education policymakers treat it as a learning tool. Its detrimental impact on children's intellectual development is no longer a matter of debate, yet governments in many countries are still reluctant to recognise the problem. Some governments have now taken belated, radical steps to ban the smartphone and related digital devices in elementary schools. Neither the central nor state governments in our country have woken up to notice the mounting evidence available showing the need to stop the digital avalanche outside the elementary school's gates.

Little surprise, therefore, that one doesn't meet children unscarred by digital exposure. I met one such child during a recent train ride. I had a long conversation with this UKG (upper kindergarten) child about life and literature. She was interested in words, poetry and signs of ageing. She was equally fluent in Hindi and English. She enjoyed listening to some old Hindi nursery rhymes I knew and recited some new ones I had not heard before. And there were the usual English rhymes as well. She also explained how the three sections of her kindergarten were organised. One thing was clear: She had no interest in the smartphone her mother was busy with. Apparently, her teachers at the Convent of Jesus and Mary had protected her from the phone, its treasure trove of stories, visuals and rhymes.

A couple of years ago, I endured the difficult company of a smaller child who, after a protracted and noisy back-and-forth, prevailed upon her father to let her listen to a long story on his phone in return for agreeing to sleep. By now it was close to midnight, and I, too, had no choice but to listen to the story. It was about two boats, one very slow and the other very fast. Those in the latter had to wait at the shore for the other one to arrive, and as they waited, a storm forced them to enter and get lost in a nearby jungle. The loud, inane story, accompanied by visuals, went on and on, with nothing but coincidence to drive the tormented plot to its inconsequential end. Alas, instead of putting the child to sleep, it only provoked further demands for a sequel, this time with thumping music.

Video devices and apps have turned childhood and pedagogic norms upside down. In Britain, the first flush of digital enthusiasm led the authorities to make reading apps compulsory. Fifteen years later, teachers are realising how wrong it was to deprive children of real books. Many schools are reverting to paper-and-pencil-based literacy and numeracy. This reversal of policy is not easy to pursue. For one thing, the promise of digitally assisted pedagogy increased class size and reduced teaching staff. Attention deficit is common among children brought up on app-based learning and AI-assisted homework marking. The familiar divide between elites and the ordinary middle class is showing signs of getting wider. The latter are hooked to e-reading and the state isn't yet ready to accept that its investment in digitally equipping schools has proved counterproductive.

> Early introduction to AI represents the biggest threat of misplaced policy. The CBSE has decided to introduce it in Grade III. Not to be left behind, Punjab wants children to learn AI from Grade I onwards. And there are schools already using AI equipment in nursery and kindergarten

Our story is likely to be similar. In fact, investment — both public and private — in e-equipping elementary schools is growing unabated. The perception that online teaching is a substitute for real teaching took root during the pandemic years. Uprooting this perception is hard. In Delhi, for example, an increase in air pollution leads to online learning. The quality of that learning is nobody's concern. Even in Kendriya Vidyalayas, the maximum use of e-enabled teaching and testing has been on the rise. Contrary to common perception and belief, e-pedagogy at early stages interferes with children's intellectual growth and makes teaching more difficult in higher grades. The widespread belief that starting early is good in every sphere of knowledge has no basis whatsoever. It is simply a middle-class superstition shared by many administrators and policymakers. They don't want to recognise that if teacher engagement is mediated by digital devices in the early years, it is likely to muzzle rather than enhance children's intellectual and emotional development.

Early introduction to AI represents the biggest threat of misplaced policy. The Central Board of Secondary Education (CBSE) has decided to introduce it in Grade III. Not to be left behind, Punjab wants children to learn AI from Grade I onwards. And there are schools already using AI equipment in nursery and kindergarten. This spectre brooks no debate or discussion. It is integral to the catch-up syndrome that has been driving children's upbringing among the urban middle classes and in public policy. No one knows how to tame this gung-ho attitude. One might have expected child-rights groups and institutions like the National Commission for the Protection of Children's Rights to take suo motu steps to scaffold small children against digital invasion. The new technologies may be useful for adults, but childhood needs a protective umbrella to sustain sanity and spontaneity. The little UKG girl who taught me new nursery rhymes in Hindi sang several classic English rhymes and drew a picture with my pen on a scrap of paper. It was obvious that her teachers had resisted the pressure we see all around to push children into screen-flipping in order to be entertained in digital solitude.

Suez to Hormuz, how chokepoints shape balance of power

RAM RAJYA

BY RAM MADHAV

HISTORY, FROM the fifth-century-BCE Peloponnesian War between Athens and Sparta to the US-Iran war and the blockade of the Hormuz and Bab-el-Mandeb straits, stands as testimony to the fact that a few chokepoints — narrow maritime routes that can be controlled by territorial armies — define and regulate the global economy. When the Spartans took control of the Bosporus, the narrow waterway which was the lifeline for food and other supplies, Athens collapsed. Seven centuries later, the Roman emperor Constantine established his capital on the banks of the same waterway, called Constantinople then and Istanbul now. Roman rule lasted for a millennium, till the Ottomans captured the region and controlled the Bosporus until World War I.

The Bosporus is one of the world's chokepoints. Since the outbreak of the Russia-Ukraine war in 2022 and the US-Iran conflict last year, some of these chokepoints have become a nightmare for the world economy. The blockades imposed by various regional powers, like the Iranians in Hormuz and the Houthis in Bab-el-Mandeb, have led to a major energy crisis.

The impact of these developments around chokepoints is not limited to the economy. They can cause tectonic shifts in the global power balance. After World War II, multilateral institutions were created to regulate economic forces. But soon, trade emerged as a new weapon and countries, especially the US, began to use it for coercion. That weaponisation led to the Suez crisis in 1956. President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt decided to nationalise this trade channel from the British and French stakeholders. A brief conflict ensued, but US President Dwight D Eisenhower's intervention led the European powers to back off, and control of the Suez Canal went to Egypt, where it has remained since.

That provided a template for how chokepoints can become weapons of trade. During the 1990s, when the information technology era dawned, and globalisation acquired momentum, some scholars believed that the political control of trade would end. Walter Wriston, an eminent American financier, predicted in his 1992 book The Twilight of Sovereignty, that national governments would grow obsolete in the face of the two emerging forces — global finance and information technology. He concluded that as the multinational corporations stitch global supply chains and establish dominance worldwide, "it will become harder and harder for politicians to unscramble the emerging global economy and reassert their declining power". This prediction remained a reality for a couple of decades. However, the political leadership soon found its way back into taking control of the global economy and trade. Chokepoints played a crucial role. The current crisis stands as proof of that.

Such crises change the power pecking order. The Suez crisis resulted in the decline of Britain and France as global powers and the emergence of the US-USSR bipolarity. Something similar would happen as a fallout of the current crisis, too, with new forces emerging and the old fading away.

The Suez crisis had brought Charles de Gaulle back to power in France. He made efforts to save Europe and the world from bipolarity. He rejected the Cold War dominance of Washington, DC, and Moscow and advocated the "Third Force" concept. He envisioned Europe — "from the Atlantic to the Urals" — as a distinct cultural and geographical entity, "Europe des Patries" (Europe of the Fatherlands), and argued that it should have an autonomous voice. He might not have succeeded in his grand vision, but he created an independent foreign policy for France.

Interestingly, at a recent media convention in Delhi, Prime Minister Narendra Modi talked about the same issues confronting the world, including the emergence of new powers, new economies and new aspirations and the failure of the existing institutions to adapt to those changing realities. "The challenge is: In a changing world, how do we build an order where new realities find their place, global institutions become more effective, and the spirit of cooperation among nations is reinforced?" he asked, adding, "this is where India's role comes to the fore".

On an earlier G20-related occasion, Modi talked about "a new world order for the collective wellbeing of humankind". De Gaulle attempted and achieved limited success seven decades ago. Given his stature and reputation in the world, Modi can achieve complete success by leading the effort to shape the new world.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Financial strain

THE SURGE in retail inflation is a sobering reminder of the financial strain on households ('First time in 2 yrs, retail inflation over 6%, RBI may hike rate again', IE, November 13). The breach of the RBI's 6 per cent upper tolerance limit, driven largely by food inflation hitting 8.94 per cent, has turned kitchen staples into costly luxuries. More concerning is the disproportionate burden falling on rural India, where inflation has climbed to 6.63 per cent, alongside broad-based price hikes across nearly all consumption categories.
Policymakers must focus on stabilising food supply chains, curbing hoarding, and improving cold-storage infra.

— Sanjay Chopra, Mohali

Sand mining

UNCHECKED SAND mining is pushing India's river systems toward ecological collapse. ('Respect the river, don't treat it like a quarry' IE, November 13) While the CEC's three-year roadmap to phase out active riverbed extraction and promote dam desilting offers a viable path forward, such dredging must follow strict scientific assessments so downstream habitats are not disrupted. Alongside the Jal Shakti Ministry's proposed sediment framework, authorities must subsidise Manufactured Sand, enforce GPS tracking on transport vehicles and promote recycled construction waste.

— A C Vineeth Kumar, Thrissur

Green growth

GREEN JOBS offer India an opportunity to address unemployment while meeting its climate commitments ('Green jobs can fill the gaps in the growth story', IE, November 13). However, the real challenge lies in making green skills accessible to young people, particularly in rural areas. Skill development must go beyond short courses and reach schools, ITIs and local communities. Green growth will be meaningful only when it creates dignified livelihoods and ensures that the benefits of development reach everyone.

— Dattatray S Giri, Pune

Dear Prime Minister, from Jawaharlal

MANOJ KUMAR JHA

IT IS my birthday today, and I am sure you will remember me and perhaps even post a message acknowledging my contribution during the years I occupied the office that you now hold. I appreciate such gestures, although as you can imagine, I remain more interested in what governments do with the ideas of their predecessors than in what they say about them on ceremonial occasions.

You may find it irksome that I should write to you again. After all, I appear to occupy a curious place in your political imagination. More than six decades after my departure from office, I am summoned into your speeches with a regularity even my most devoted contemporaries might have considered excessive. I have never been uncomfortable with criticism; democracy would be poorer without it. My only concern is that our preoccupation with the quarrels of history should not become an escape from the more demanding obligations of the present.

You are well aware of the circumstances in which we got Independence. Partition wrecked countless dreams. We did not possess the reassurance of readymade answers. Despite our limitations, we endeavoured to build a republic where the wounds of yesterday would not imprison the possibilities of tomorrow. I have no desire to justify every decision we made. History must remain open to scrutiny.

Bapu's leadership taught us that peaceful resistance, sustained by moral courage and collective determination, could challenge an empire equipped with instruments of coercion. We also knew well that if colonial habits continued in Indian self-government, independence would have little meaning. For this reason, the freedom of every citizen to question authority is foundational in our Constitution. I am deeply disturbed by the treatment of peaceful protesters, especially young people and women, and by the shrinking of spaces where citizens may assemble to express grievances. A government confident of its democratic legitimacy should listen attentively to them. If you do so, you may discover that a few uncomfortable conversations reveal more about the condition of the country than several carefully choreographed public meetings.

> When debate is curtailed, Parliament risks losing the very quality that distinguishes it from an executive gathering

You frequently invoke our ancient civilisation. I welcome that interest, although I suspect we might disagree about what constitutes its most remarkable achievement. For me, India's greatness emerged through the extraordinary capacity of different traditions, languages, faiths and ways of life to influence one another. I find it deeply unsettling when patriotism is measured through religious identity or minorities are made to feel that their belonging depends on the majority's goodwill.

I would also like to convey something about Parliament and the Opposition. I sometimes wonder whether parliamentary democracy is being reimagined as a contest between those who supposedly embody the nation and those who are accused of obstructing it. That would be an unfortunate misunderstanding of our constitutional arrangement. During my years in office, I encountered critics whose arguments were often uncomfortable. Hiren Mukherjee, among others, could be particularly formidable. A majority gives you the right to govern, but it does not confer exclusive ownership of the national interest. Opposition members enter Parliament with democratic mandates. When debate is curtailed, Parliament risks losing the very quality that distinguishes it from an executive gathering.

Political power has a peculiar ability to persuade its occupants that electoral victory establishes the correctness of their every judgment. I was not immune to this temptation, and neither, I suspect, is any PM. That is why constitutional restraints and independent voices matter. When we spoke of India's tryst with destiny, we imagined a journey in which every generation would enlarge the freedoms inherited from its predecessors.

You may disagree with my policies and criticise my understanding of India. I will defend your right to do so, but I hope you will also defend the right of ordinary Indians to disagree with you.

With good wishes for you and our beloved Republic,

Jawaharlal Nehru

DHIR JINGRAN

EIGHTY-FIVE HOURS. That is how much time a child in an average government primary school spends learning in a school year — barely a tenth of the 800-900 hours the system prescribes as the annual instructional hours. Good teaching matters, but limited teaching can only mean limited learning. Yet in debates about learning quality, this elephant in the room is almost entirely overlooked.

Board examination duties, campaigns and celebrations, extreme heat or cold, and holidays declared by district administrations can together account for 30-35 days when schools are closed or teaching is minimal. Frequent holidays also disrupt consistent teaching.

The school calendar does not optimise instructional time. March, free of extreme weather, is lost almost entirely to examinations. Attendance is low in April and May. Summer holidays are often advanced by 8-10 days because of heat. July is considered the enrolment month, and students slowly return to school. Holidays break up October and November. In northern and eastern India, the number of teaching days is limited to only about 140-145.

Elections and electoral roll revision take up about 25-30 days almost every year for most teachers. While ECI guidelines emphasise that Booth Level Officer (BLO) duties should not disrupt teaching, this rarely happens. In some states this year, SIR, SSR, BLO, and census duties could take away more than three months of teaching time. District administrations add other tasks; some, like a survey of stray dogs, border on the bizarre. Many teachers use these duties as cover to stay away from teaching longer than required.

Teachers' official leave and unauthorised absence bring teaching days down to 100-110 a year. Student attendance, averaging 75 per cent and often much lower, further cuts contact time. Teachers are required to enter large amounts of data, further reducing teaching time by 10-15 days for some.

Over 70 per cent of government primary schools have three or fewer teachers,

> We are now down to about 120-130 hours of teaching in an academic year, against 800-900 allocated — an erosion of over 80 per cent. In good education systems worldwide, the gap is less than 20 per cent and 1.04 lakh are single-teacher schools. Where one teacher teaches two or more grades, each may receive as little as one-third of the teacher's time. In most primary schools in northern and eastern India, little teaching happens after the mid-day meal, leaving only about 3-3.5 effective teaching hours a day. We are now down to about 120-130 hours of teaching in an academic year, against 800-900 allocated — an erosion of over 80 per cent. In good education systems worldwide, the gap is less than 20 per cent.

The Teaching and Learning Practices Survey 2025, a nine-state study of early-grade classrooms, found that students were distracted or off-task for 27 per cent of the time they were being taught. That brings us to the number we began with: Students spend only 85 hours on any kind of learning task in a school year. The fact that rote memorisation, handwriting practice, choral repetition, and other mechanical tasks make up almost half of this time is a story for another day.

Some solutions can be tried out. The district administration should also identify other employees for such duties. Teachers from schools with inadequate teachers should not be nominated for these duties. Governments can explore recruiting or designating a dedicated pool of personnel for recurrent voter-list-related work. The school calendar should protect uninterrupted teaching at times of the year when attendance is likely to be high. Data entry must be rationalised.

Teachers belong in classrooms, teaching. Unless this most basic condition is met, all other efforts to improve student learning will fall short.

Three formats in one tournament: Meet Total Chess

Budapest, November 13

CHESS HAS never been a particularly television-friendly sport. Over the years, organisers and officials have tried to introduce elements such as live screens and commentary to bridge the gap with the viewer. The latest attempt, however, is a reimagining of chess competitions themselves. Total Chess is a plan for a "complete" new world championship in the sport. A pilot event is currently underway in Hungary's capital of Budapest.

What is Total Chess?

The Total Chess World Championship Tour that starts next year will have four events around the year in different cities, with the first three events having 24 players each and the finale having four players fighting it out to become the FIDE World Combined Champion. The idea is to crown the most complete chess player in the world.

Chess currently has three formats — classical, rapid and blitz. And each has its own world championship: the Classical World Championship (the most prestigious, and chess's equivalent of Test cricket), the Rapid World Championship (comparable to ODIs) and the World Blitz Championship (closest to T20s, with players starting with 10 minutes or less on the clock).

But at Total Chess, players will have to be good at all three formats. To be clear, the event will involve a modified version of classical, called fast classical. This is simply an accelerated form of classical chess, with players starting a game with 45 minutes on their clock and getting a bonus increment of 30 seconds each time they make a move. In classical chess, players usually start a game with 90 to 120 minutes on the clock, with increments for each move made.

What will a Total Chess tournament look like?

Each tournament leg will have a group stage where the 24 players are divided in four groups of six each. Each player faces the other member of the group twice in fast classic. Over the five days, they play two fast classic games a day. Each leg of Total Chess will start with a pre-tournament nine-round blitz event that will help determine rankings in a group in case of tiebreaks.

There are 24 players in the pilot event including five-time world champion Magnus Carlsen. There are three Indians too: Praggnanandhaa, R Vaishali and Arjun Erigaisi.

Will playing in Total Chess be more difficult?

Yes. Playing two fast classic games a day for five days straight will be physically and mentally taxing, Hungarian chess legend Peter Leko told The Indian Express. While players do play multiple games a day at rapid and blitz tournaments, those don't count in standard ratings.

But at Total Chess, not only are players entering the unknown with a time control most of them haven't played before, they are also under pressure to do well to preserve their standard rating. This is something that most players are protective about.

"The biggest trick that normally allows you to play many rapid or blitz games in a day is that it does not count for (classical) rating. So you take it lighter. When rating points are on the line, you realise that these fast classical games are as important as any classical game," says Leko.

(The writer is in Budapest at the invitation of Total Chess)

• ECONOMY

Investments up, boosting growth; will trend hold up?

Rising corporate investment and better capacity utilisation bode well for GDP growth. Sustaining the momentum will depend on an old worry: Consumption

UDIT MISRA

SINCE THE day it came to power, the Narendra Modi government's approach to the economy has been to pull back the role of the government and incentivise the private sector to play its part. To be sure, this is very much in line with the change in India's approach since the 1991 economic reforms. Despite criticism of growing unemployment — it hit a 45-year high in 2017-18 according to the government's Periodic Labour Force Survey — the government stayed the course with its "Minimum Government, Maximum Governance" mantra.

The government's view has been that the private sector must be incentivised to invest and, in the process, create jobs, economic growth and prosperity, while the government's focus should be to make it easier for businesses to function. To this end, it introduced reforms such as the Insolvency and Bankruptcy Code (IBC) in 2016 and the Goods and Services Tax in 2017. The biggest such incentive was the historic cut in corporate tax rates introduced in 2019.

However, as the events since then have shown, investment rates, which had been trailing off since 2011-12, did not rise as the government had hoped.

What was the problem?

By the end of 2022, the government's exasperation with corporate investments, despite subsidies such as the Production Linked Incentive (PLI) Schemes, was made clear. Finance Minister Nirmala Sitharaman even compared India Inc. to Hanuman from an episode in the Ramayana, where Hanuman displays diffidence about his immense abilities. "Is it like Hanuman you don't believe in your own capacity?" she had asked.

In the years since, and especially as the 2024 general elections loomed, the government's approach shifted to addressing the underlying issue: weak consumption levels. In other words, if people did not consume at a fast enough rate, companies had no incentive to make fresh investments.

Non-Ferrous Metals	22	88,475	6.8%	-35.6%

To address this issue, the government's focus shifted to providing tax breaks to consumers — both personal income tax and GST — apart from substantial direct benefit transfers. The focus shifted from PLI to the Employment Linked Incentive (ELI) scheme — that is, the subsidy was tied not to production but to companies providing employment. This is because there can't be much consumption without jobs. Even when investments rose, they were patchy, reflecting the K-shaped recovery in consumption — when different parts of the economy are growing at different rates.

But a turnaround may be underway.

What's happening to investments?

On Wednesday, Bank of Baroda (BoB) published new research that looked at the balance sheets of more than 2,000 companies that have announced their corporate earnings so far, and it reveals a steady growth in gross fixed assets (read: investments into boosting the productive capacity of companies). BoB only looked at non-financial firms from the sample "to focus more on how investment has behaved for the manufacturing and services segments".

Here's what the study found. The 2,010 companies were categorised into 31 sectors, and 22 of them witnessed an improvement in the growth rate in fixed assets in the first half of the current financial year (see table 1).

Broad growth in investments

Actual investments by companies seem to be going up across a large number of sectors.

Capacity utilisation is also rising, which suggests a natural incentive for companies to invest in the future as well.

In the remaining sectors, the growth rate was lower than in the first six months last year. But in three of these remaining sectors (see table 2), the growth rate was still in double digits. In only about one-fifth of the total sectors, the growth in investments was lower than in the first half (H1) this year as compared to H1 last year (see table 3).

"What is important here is to note that these are not investment intentions but actual investments," says Madan Sabnavis, Chief Economist of BoB.

Why are companies investing more?

Typically, companies start making fresh investments when existing capacity starts getting used up because demand from consumers is up. Sabnavis says there is evidence that capacity utilisation is also going up.

To assess what is happening to capacity utilisation, BoB researchers mapped the asset turnover ratio. This is the ratio of a company's sales to its fixed assets. It is an indicator of the utilisation of its existing assets (read machinery) in terms of output generated.

A declining asset turnover ratio would mean that the industry has capacity to scale up production; as such, there may be less investment in physical capital in the short run. A rising ratio, on the other hand, would mean buoyancy in output relative to existing investments; as such, it could result in enhanced investment.

The BoB study finds that, for the sample companies considered, the asset-turnover ratio improved from 1.14 in September 2025 to 1.30 in September 2026. "This is a very good indicator of better utilization of capacity by India Inc. 23 of the 31 industries have witnessed an improved ratio which does indicate higher investments in future."

Are we there yet?

The data shows two positive trends. One, actual investments by companies seem to be going up across a large number of sectors. Two, capacity utilisation is rising, which suggests a natural incentive for companies to invest in the future as well.

The immediate impact of these numbers could be that when the official GDP numbers for the second quarter are released by November-end, the actual growth rate can be expected to beat forecasts. For instance, RBI has pencilled in a growth rate of 7.2% for real GDP growth in Q2 (July, August and September), but more and more economists are expecting the actual rate to be higher — BoB expects 7.4%, State Bank of India expects 7.8%, and HSBC expects 7.5%.

But does that mean Indian companies can be expected to continue to invest from hereon, and that long-standing policy goal of higher investments by private companies has been achieved?

Here, the picture is a little hazy. That's because while investments and GDP have grown fast in the first half of the year, the outlook for consumption is weak.

HSBC Global Investment Research pointed said that while rural demand has remained steady so far, "the decline in real rural wages cannot be ignored". "Winter sowing has started on a weak note with low soil moisture and depleted reservoirs. If El Niño-related heat leads to pre-maturing of crops by shortening the grain-filling period, this will further impact yields and hurt rural demand. Tractor sales have slowed, and non-durable demand remains weak," states the HSBC report. In the urban informal sector too, real wages are barely growing.

In short, the old hurdle of weak consumption may hamper sustained investments by companies.

Can divorce abroad end Indian marriage? The law on foreign rulings

Amaal Sheikh
New Delhi, November 13

THE SUPREME Court has held that a person who is married under Indian law cannot use a foreign divorce decree to escape bigamy proceedings in India if the divorce was granted on a ground that's not recognised in India. A Supreme Court bench of Justices Prashant Kumar Mishra and Shree Chandrashekar on November 3 held that a change in citizenship or the fact that the second marriage took place abroad cannot alter the legal consequences of a marriage that continues under Indian law.

Facts of the case

In the present case, the dispute arose after the marriage was solemnised under Hindu rites and customs in 2003. The couple eventually moved to the UK, and their relationship deteriorated. The husband then filed for divorce in a Guntur court, but his petition was dismissed. An appeal was filed in the Andhra Pradesh High Court, but that was withdrawn too.

After acquiring British citizenship in February 2013, he approached the Cambridge County Court in August that year. The court granted divorce in January 2014 on the ground of irrevocable breakdown of marriage. He eventually went on to marry another woman in the UK in March 2014.

His first wife eventually filed a complaint alleging bigamy under Section 494 of the Indian Penal Code (since replaced by the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita in 2023), a punishment for which is either seven years imprisonment or a fine. She argued that she had objected to the UK jurisdiction and that irretrievable breakdown of marriage was not a ground for divorce under the Hindu Marriage Act (HMA), 1955, which governed their marriage.

Indian law and foreign rulings

The recognition of foreign rulings in India is governed by Sections 13 and 14 of the Code of Civil Procedure (CPC).

Section 13 lays down six exceptions under which a foreign judgment would not be considered conclusive in India. These include cases where the foreign court lacked jurisdiction, the judgment was not granted on merits, or the order was obtained through fraud. Recognition can also be refused where the foreign court refused to recognise Indian law despite its applicability.

Court precedent

- The legal position on how India treats foreign divorce decrees was laid down in a 1991 case.
- The Supreme Court held that a foreign divorce decree must be consistent with the matrimonial law under which the parties were married.
- It laid down two principles: For a foreign divorce to be valid, the ground for divorce must be recognised in India, and both spouses must have agreed to place themselves before the foreign court.

Section 14 provides that a foreign judgment is presumed valid unless the contrary is proved, but this presumption is easily rebutted when one of the exceptions in Section 13 is shown.

In matrimonial disputes, these provisions essentially mean that a divorce granted abroad does not automatically bring a marriage governed by Indian law to an end in India. The divorce decree must meet the requirements for recognition under the CPC.

What Supreme Court held

The top court held that the husband had initially approached an Indian court for divorce but, after failing to obtain relief, had withdrawn his appeal and moved to a foreign court. The UK decree was based on a ground that the Indian law does not recognise.

It said: "The foreign divorce decree was passed in contravention of the existing matrimonial law in India and on a ground that is not even recognized statutorily."

The bench said proceedings at the foreign court indicate that the wife raised objections and thus her participation could not be equated with "an unconditional submission to the jurisdiction of the foreign court". The husband also argued that he was a British citizen when he married the second time and the marriage took place outside India. Thus, the Indian law could not be applied to him. The bench rejected this, saying that the inquiry into bigamy could not be restricted to where the second marriage took place, as it only had to consider whether the first marriage continued to subsist.

The husband argued that the FIR was filed after a long unexplained delay. But the bench observed that "bigamy is a continuing offence", which means it's an offence for as long as the second marriage persists.

The court also found that the material submitted before it was not sufficient to establish that the parents of the husband had participated in facilitating the second marriage, nor was it enough to establish whether the second wife knew that the first marriage was still subsisting.

What Democrat-held US Congress means for decades of bipartisan support for Israel

Moinuddin Ahmad
New Delhi, November 13

THE MORNING after the Republican wipeout in the US midterm elections, Vice President J D Vance posted a lengthy post-mortem on social media site X. The following was his prescription for Republicans to win back voters: End the Iran war, bring down the cost of living, focus on America — and "change our relationship to Israel".

The Democratic wave has brought the US-Israel relationship, and voters' growing scepticism of it, into sharp focus.

Over the decades, Israel has largely been the one issue on which both Democrats and Republicans have largely been on the same page. Multiple polls this year, however, have shown that people across the political spectrum are questioning the uncritical backing for the country. Indeed, just before the midterm polls opened, President Donald Trump said the US would cut off $4 billion in annual aid to Israel, though it was not clear if this was a bid to sway voters.

Formative years

When Israel was formed in 1948, President Harry S Truman faced opposition within his own administration over recognising it. The Department of State as well as the Department of Defence argued that recognising Israel would alienate oil-rich Arab monarchies, jeopardise the stance against the Soviet Union in the emerging Cold War and instigate prolonged regional instability.

Truman recognised Israel just a few minutes after David Ben-Gurion declared independence. His decision was said to have been driven by a combination of moral convictions regarding Holocaust survivors, sympathy for Jewish statehood, and pressure from American Jewish leaders and Democratic strategists.

Democrats have traditionally served as the haven for American Zionism as well as pro-Israel advocacy for several decades. In contemporary international relations, Democrats' policies towards Israel are defined by a "two-tiered realism".

At the institutional level, its leadership maintains a commitment to Israel's security, defence assistance and right to self-defence. At the ideological level, however, a widening partisan and generational rift has emerged. Foreign policy experts have noted that progressive Democrats increasingly view the Israeli-Palestinian conflict through the lens of civil rights, human rights universalism, and anti-occupational norms.

When US Presidents acted against Israel

DWIGHT D EISENHOWER (1956, 1957): Following the Suez Crisis, Eisenhower threatened to end all US aid and private charity to Israel unless it withdrew from the Sinai Peninsula. Israel moved back.

RONALD REAGAN (1981, 1982): Reagan suspended F-16 shipments after Israel's unilateral strike on an Iraq nuclear reactor and its annexation of Golan Heights.

GEORGE H.W. BUSH (1991): Bush withheld $10 billion in loan guarantees to force PM Yitzhak Shamir to freeze settlement construction in the Palestinian territories.

JOE BIDEN (2024): Biden temporarily paused a shipment of 2,000-pound heavy demolition bombs to discourage a full-scale Israeli invasion of Rafah in the devastated Gaza Strip. But he continued military aid.

Republican realignment

In the late 1970s, Republicans began to forge an alliance with white Evangelical Christians, who supported Israel due to their belief in dispensationalist theology, which professes that the modern gathering of Jewish people in the Land of Israel and the re-establishment of the Israeli state in 1948 are fulfilments of Biblical prophecy and precursors to the "Second Coming of Christ".

By the 1990s, the Republican leadership adopted an approach aligning with Israel's right-leaning Likud party. It prioritised unconditional support at the UN in opposition to a two-state solution that requires Israeli territorial concessions, and strong support for Israeli sovereignty claims over Jerusalem and the occupied West Bank.

Democratic divergence

While Democrats at the core remain pro-Israel, the party's broader base has questioned the favours extended to the Jewish state at the cost of US taxpayers.

US assistance to Israel is managed through structured statutory frameworks, primarily Foreign Military Financing. Since the 2016 Memorandum of Understanding negotiated under the Obama administration, the US has provided Israel with $3.8 billion annually. However, contrary to the belief that US military aid to Israel has always been unconditional, several presidents have repeatedly frozen, delayed, suspended, or leveraged aid to compel Israeli strategic compliance (see box).

What the future holds

As Democrats have secured a majority in both the Senate and the House of Representatives, bilateral ties are likely to be subject to rigorous Congressional scrutiny.

With Democrats controlling key committees, Congress could tighten enforcement of existing laws that restrict aid to foreign security units implicated in gross human rights abuses and countries blocking US humanitarian assistance.

Moreover, settler violence in the occupied West Bank and the expansion of outposts have resulted in friction between Democrats and Israeli leadership.

But it would be premature to count on the new US Congress (it takes charge in January) forcing a sweeping shift in policy stance for two reasons. First is Trump's veto power, which would take a two-thirds majority in both Houses to overcome. And second, it is establishment Democrats, who have generally not been strident in their criticism of Israel, who appear poised to take up the top Congressional leadership positions. Their stance remains to be seen.

Indeed, Israel's war on Gaza began in 2023, when Joe Biden was president. And Biden, an establishment Democrat, repeatedly backed Israel with arms and aid despite the widespread humanitarian disaster that was unfolding in Gaza.

Israel, meanwhile, does anticipate some systemic pressure to condition military assistance on human rights compliance and territorial restraint. It also expects more open criticism of settlements.

Additionally, US foreign policy is likely to prioritise broader regional security arrangements — including Saudi-Israeli normalisation — related directly to progress on Palestinian sovereignty. But it is unlikely to abandon its historical commitment to Israel's core security and existence, even if the strategic baseline has shifted.

Every day, dressed in the pinks, greens and purples of app-based platforms, domestic workers turn up outside homes, offering their services. SUKRITA BARUAH meets some of them as they adapt to their new work tool — their phones, through which they log in and out, accept and decline work

SCRUB. RINSE. CLEAN. REPEAT.

THE RELENTLESS LIVES OF APP-BASED DOMESTIC HELPS

WHEN SHE was little, Akhila would stand on a footstool to wash dishes in Noida homes. Scrub, rinse, toss. It's the kind of work she kept doing over the years, what every woman around her did. Her mother, sister, mother-in-law, are all domestic workers.

But Akhila is different. Now 31, she works for a "company". Every morning at 7 am, she and her cousin Kritika leave for work, both wearing purple smocks over their salwar suits, their hair tied back in neat, low buns, bags strapped to their backs. With Akhila sitting pillion, Kanchan cycles to a high-rise apartment complex 5 km from their home in Noida's Gejha gaon.

Akhila is a gig worker with InstaHelp, one of the many app-based platforms that offer the services of domestic workers to households across the National Capital Region, and other major cities in India. She is among the thousands of women, dressed in the pinks, greens and purples of these platforms, who turn up at the doors of their clients, offering to scrub, clean and dust.

Gig workers, a concept that entered Indian markets in the 2010s, were first associated with drivers of ride-hailing apps, followed by food delivery workers, plumbers, repairmen and beauticians, and later, quick commerce delivery workers. Over the last couple of years, this sector has expanded to domestic workers, that quintessentially South Asian, all-pervasive and precarious segment that employs anywhere between 2.8 million (Census 2011) and 50 million women (unofficial estimates).

The entry of domestic helps into the gig economy has disrupted a segment that has for generations run on traditional networks — a referral by a neighbour or a security guard lands the worker a job, which is then sustained by everyday negotiations with the employer.

Pronto, one of the major players in this space, estimates that the number of women engaged on its platform rose from about 1,440 in January 2026 to more than 15,000 by September. Its workers, the platform said, responded to over 1.5 million bookings in August. Another platform, Snabbit, estimated that over 35,000 women are engaged with them and claims that around 10,000 new women join every month.

Akhila, reporting for work

Akhila's days begin at 5 am.

With her husband and two children still asleep, she fires up the wood-fired stove outside. Over the next hour-and-a-half, as she makes tea and *paratha*s, cleans utensils and packs tiffin-boxes with the soya sabzi-rice that the couple cooked the previous night, she talks about her village in West Bengal, growing up in Noida, how she never went to school, but wants to see her two children educated. Her husband, she says, is frequently out of work and fritters away his slim earnings.

Until earlier this year, Akhila worked as a cook in three Noida homes, earning Rs 21,000 a month. Then, she and her husband went back to their village in West Bengal for a month in June to manage a land dispute. When she returned, she says, finding work again became a struggle. One of her neighbours suggested that she try gig work and she took it up.

"To be honest, when you cook for others, there is too much chik-chik and fussing over personal preferences," she says, slapping balls of dough into round *paratha*s.

Around 6.30 am, it is time for her to change into her purple uniform that is strewn on a trunk next to their bed. All this while, as she works and gets ready, her six-year-old son's attention is wrapped around a smartphone that plays tinny jingles and cartoons. She now snaps at him, and takes it back.

Akhila bought the phone for Rs 22,000 on EMI, after she got her first payout — Rs 9,391 for 15 days of work — from InstaHelp. The phone is essential for her work, but she had never handled, let alone owned, one before she entered the gig workforce.

By 7 am, Akhila and her cousin Kritika, who is also her neighbour, leave for work. Outside the gates of the apartment complex that is their assigned 'workhub' — where the workers reach before the start of their shift — they log in, take selfies and upload them to a work WhatsApp group to report that they are present for duty. Then, they wait for the bookings to start coming.

Over the past few weeks, Akhila has grown more adept at using the phone, though she cannot read any of the Hindi text on the app. She follows the icons and colours instead. Once her phone begins buzzing with the first booking of the day, she taps on a green icon to accept.

About a dozen women in the uniforms of app-based platforms mill around on the grassy divider on the road outside the society gates as they wait for their bookings or take a break: scrolling through their phones, napping, chatting, eating.

The workhub is almost always outside the society gates. "These kaamwaali (domestic helps) are not allowed to come inside unless it's time for their booking," says the guard at the housing society.

Dreaming, surviving in a city

She earlier worked in the production line at a phone charger assembling unit in Noida. She had moved from her village in Uttar Pradesh's Aligarh to tend to an ailing younger brother who died last year. The shift at the charger factory was 12 hours long and she took home around Rs 9,000 a month. "That was just not enough to live in the city," she says.

Then, in April this year, a woman from Pronto visited the factory. "She distributed pamphlets to the women workers. Most of them threw it away. I was also a little suspicious but I kept the pamphlet and called on the number a few days later," she says.

A job interview of sorts followed, where she was asked to read as much Hindi as she could, and told to go to one of their centres for a six-day training. Two days after the training, she was assigned work at a high-rise in Noida.

Negotiating the world of apps isn't easy, though. Sumi recalls bursting into tears in the middle of the road on her first day at work, trying to follow directions on the digital map.

"I didn't tell my family at first about my work... just that I am working for a company. When I told my father, he was upset. I told him the pay was good. He finally came around and told me to do whatever makes me happy," she says.

Sumi says she earns a baseline "salary" of around Rs 24,000 after working 10-12 hour shifts everyday, with a two-day break a month, and that this goes up with bonuses and incentives. Some months, she says, she gets around Rs 35,000.

The pay, along with the nature of the job that gives it a formal structure — the uniforms, training, customer ratings — are what many gig workers cite as their main draw.

What they call "salary" is a guaranteed amount for each shift they clock in, linked to the hours in that shift, whether or not they get any bookings during the shift.

An email from Pronto attributed to the company spokesperson reads, "She isn't promised a monthly figure, because she decides how many days and hours she works, and what she earns in a month follows from that... In July, the average fixed payout was about Rs 137 an hour worked, and about Rs 179 an hour, including incentives. On a daily basis, that was about Rs 667 fixed and about Rs 874 including incentives, before special bonuses."

But there are also stiff 'disincentives' or penalties for logging in late, being late for a booking, etc. One of the platforms, for instance, issues 'red cards' when "a rule is broken". On this platform, a 10-minute delay in starting work leads to the worker being issued a card, which results in a penalty of Rs 35. Being absent on a weekend, when demand for services is at its highest, earns the worker 20 red cards and a penalty of Rs 700 (20x35).

But these are fine-prints most workers struggle to understand.

When she joined, says Sumi, her supervisor told her that there was only one thing for her to understand: "Apne haathon ke speed ko badhana (Increase the speed at which you work)."

"We need to work jaldi, jaldi (fast) so that we can finish off all the work during the booking time, the customer is happy and they rate us well. Most of the time, the next booking comes even before I start walking out of the door," she says.

It's a hectic pace, but Sumi likes what it gives her. "I always thought I would just be in the village, looking after my family. But look at me now. I am working in a company. I have a good salary. I haven't thought of what's ahead but I'm starting to think that I don't want to get married," she says.

Like Sumi, Priya, 22, had another job before she joined Snabbit. She was a saleswoman in a clothes shop in Gurgaon, but found herself without work after she took a break to visit her husband's village in Lucknow district. She learned about the gig work from a pamphlet she saw at the vegetable market and landed the job.

So far, none of her relatives know. "We are Thakurs. People from my caste don't work so much in other people's homes. More than anything, I fear my family will taunt my husband for not being able to provide for me. So I just tell my father that I work in a shop and earn good money," she says.

Priya says she has had people offering to hire her for a fixed monthly pay. But she says would rather not be attached to a household. "I don't think I'm comfortable working at the same house everyday and them being my 'employer'. I don't like that set-up," she says.

She wants to continue working for a few years before planning a baby. She works so that she and her husband can have a life together in Gurgaon, away from the meddling and conflict of their families. Someday, she hopes, she and her husband can build a separate house for themselves in his village.

'When to block a customer'

On a Tuesday morning, 23 women wearing pink Snabbit uniforms sit in an AC room in a building in Gurgaon, watching a video on a screen — a woman explaining to them about the red 'SOS' feature on their apps, which they can tap if they feel unsafe while on duty.

"We care about your safety the way your family does," says the trainer conducting the session — the first of a two-day training for the women before they are inducted as Snabbit "experts".

The training also has sessions on how to use the app; pay, incentives and disincentives; safety and social security features; grooming for the job; and even a warning against stealing.

The training centre occupies a floor in a building in Gurgaon's Sector 44. One room on the floor is the classroom where the women are undergoing their orientation. The rest of it is modelled as a mock apartment. One of the rooms has a washroom set-up with two sinks, two toilets and cleaning paraphernalia. Two washing machines are in a corridor, and beyond it is a room with an ironing board, two kitchen sinks, appliances and a row of cabinets. Women in pink Snabbit uniforms are at work here, ironing clothes and washing dishes — part of the "technical training" on Day 2.

At the end of this, says Bhoomika Saigal, head of training at Snabbit, the training associates determine if they are ready to join work. If not, the workers are called back for a third day.

While the training helped, says Sumi, she recalls how she froze on her first day at work, when the owner allegedly verbally abused her and threatened her with physical assault.

"We had been told what to do in this situation, but I was so scared that I didn't remember anything then. So I stood there quietly. But a few days ago, when I got assigned to the same house, I blocked the customer on the app. Apart from that incident, the rest of the people I have met have been nice," she says.

"I would say the presence of a platform, by design, significantly reduces the risks that these women face, because there is a tech-enabled ecosystem that acts as an intermediary layer between the customer and the expert, something that is almost entirely missing in the offline world," he says, referring to the SOS feature on the app. Pronto and InstaHelp, too, have similar SOS buttons on their app.

Vandana Vasudevan, author of OTP Please: Online Buyers, Sellers and Gig Workers in South Asia, says, "Platforms are offering a range of possibilities to women, making it flexible for them to enter the workforce. You can log in and log off. If you want to attend a marriage in your village, if your child is sick, you don't have to login... That, I think, is quite remarkable in itself because the biggest barrier for poorer women to enter the workforce has been the need to manage homes and be the primary caregiver."

However, Vandana says, she is concerned about the lack of designated spaces for workers to rest or wait between bookings, calling it a "huge lacuna".

"Almost everyone on the platform is a woman, and we are aware of the safety situation. There must be discussion about some kind of set-up for them to wait, otherwise this is just abandoning them on the streets," she says.

On a Friday, 40-year-old Nasreen turns up at her workhub near a Noida high-rise, but not in her pink company uniform. She has a different aim today: to ask around for houses that want to engage a domestic worker on a regular basis.

She is unhappy because she has now been assigned to a new workhub, farther away from her home. "I can't walk all that way. Anyway, I hated waiting on the road all day. Dekho, mai kaali pad gayi hoon (Look, my skin has turned dark)."

Anita Juneja, convener of the Delhi Gharelu Kamgar Sangathan, a labour union that works for domestic workers, says many of their members have signed up on these platforms this year. "A lot of women who didn't have regular work shifted to these platforms since there is assured work, and even if there is no work assigned, they will get paid for their shift," she says.

She has noticed, however, that fatigue starts to sink in soon, because the platforms lack flexibility.

"Things like penalties for being late, the pressure of ratings, not being able to take a day off beyond the fixed two days... And then the lack of a place to rest between bookings. They get tired, and there is little scope to rest and recover," she says.

"When I worked as a cook, I used to come home in the afternoons, pick my children from school and feed them before going again in the evening. The 11-hour shift is too much for me. I've been asking the company for a shorter shift but I haven't got it yet. I also lost my pay on days I missed work... It is starting to get difficult," she says.

• HELP AT HAND, ON THE APP

Training

Before being inducted, workers undergo training, where they are taught how to use the app and handle bookings. They are also given "technical training": how to make beds, use a washing machine, clean a fridge, iron, clean bathrooms

The workhub

Once inducted, they are assigned a 'hub', usually outside a residential complex. They report there before starting their shift, which can range from 4 to 12 hours, and wait for bookings from customers

Bookings

When a customer makes a request, the workers are alerted on the app. They can accept the booking or reject it. Bookings can range from 30 minutes to three hours

The work

If the worker has been booked for, say, 2 hours, she has to perform whatever task the customer asks for within that time slot. No cooking (though they can do meal prep like chopping vegetables and kneading dough), no personal favours like shoulder or foot rubs

• How pay is calculated

Workers are offered a fixed payout for every shift, depending on the length of the shift they are assigned, irrespective of whether or not they get bookings. For example, in July, Pronto's average payout was Rs 137 for a one-hour shift

For the bookings they complete, they can earn incentives, such as bonuses for starting orders on time when the location is more than a km away, maintaining high customer ratings and reporting for work every weekend

There are deductions for logging in late or arriving late for bookings

MOSCOW AGREES TO INCLUDE EUROPEAN LEADERS IN UPCOMING TALKS, SAYS KUSHNER

Ukraine launches 1,200 drones at Russia amid US-led security talks

Europe must secure truce before advancing talks, says EU foreign policy chief Kallas

Associated Press
Kyiv, November 13

UKRAINE FIRED almost 1,200 drones at Russian targets overnight in one of its biggest aerial attacks since Moscow's invasion nearly five years ago.

Meanwhile, negotiators raised the stakes in talks to stop the fighting by including for discussion wider European security arrangements that have been in place since the end of the Cold War. That has alarmed European leaders and placed a question mark over NATO's role.

After two days of talks with Russian and Ukrainian delegations in Abu Dhabi this week, US envoys went in person to brief Russian President Vladimir Putin in the Kremlin and Ukrainian President Volodymyr Zelenskyy, who was meeting with European Union leaders in Dublin, Ireland.

Rescue workers put out a fire of a residential house destroyed in a Russian strike on Kharkiv region, Ukraine on Friday. AP

Further talks are planned as negotiators seek a breakthrough in peace efforts, according to US envoys Steve Witkoff and Jared Kushner, who is also President Donald Trump's son-in-law.

Kushner said Russia has agreed to include Europe in upcoming talks, after Moscow's long insistence that the continent's governments were part of the problem because they were supporting Ukraine.

Europe's presence at the negotiating table will allow negotiators "to address the broader postwar European security arrangements alongside the territorial issues between Ukraine and Russia," Kushner said on X.

As European leaders scrambled to find an envoy to the talks, they were also wary of Russian maneuvering as well as Trump's praise for Putin and his administration's sharp criticism of Europe.

The EU's top diplomat, Kaja Kallas, said Friday that Europe must insist on a ceasefire before taking the negotiations further — the opposite of what Putin demands. "If we start to talk about what Russia is asking regarding the security architecture, we actually walk into the traps that Russia is setting us," she said in Dublin.

Luxembourg Prime Minister Luc Frieden insisted that Europe must take its fate into its own hands. "We cannot let neither the Americans nor the Russians decide about our future."

Moscow is aiming "to dismantle NATO and the post-Cold War European security architecture," the Institute for the Study of War said in an assessment late Thursday. Kremlin spokesperson Dmitry Peskov reaffirmed that Russia is open for contacts with the Europeans.

"Once we understand (Europe's) true intentions and their readiness to facilitate the peace process, then it will be possible to make a decision on holding a dialogue regarding a settlement in Ukraine in an expanded format," Peskov said.

Moscow car bomb injures ex-Ukraine aide

Moscow: A car bomb in Moscow wounded a onetime spokesman for a pro-Russian former prime minister of Ukraine on Friday, Russian investigators said, the second such explosion in the country in two days.

Sergei Zavorotniy, once a top aide to Mykola Azarov, Ukraine's prime minister from 2010 to 2014, was hospitalised after a car he was driving blew up on a street in Chertanovo, a district of the Russian capital, the investigators' statement said.

Moscow has blamed Ukraine for previous assassinations of senior military officials and people linked to Russia. Ren TV and the 112 Telegram channel both reported that Zavorotniy had lost his left arm in the attack and was in hospital with a concussion, rib fractures and other injuries.

Russia's Investigative Committee, said it was investigating the incident. REUTERS

SENIOR TRUMP administration officials agree that the United States should tighten controls on Nvidia's advanced chips to stop China catching up in the AI race. Commerce Secretary Howard Lutnick has often disagreed on controls.

Over the past year, Lutnick has clashed with senior officials over technology sales, particularly Nvidia's chip exports to Asia. Administration officials and lawmakers accuse the Commerce Department of being too close to Nvidia and co-founder Jensen Huang, and of failing to police sales to China.

The issue drew scrutiny after The New York Times reported that Huang had a relationship with Alice Huang, whom US intelligence agencies believe to be a Chinese spy. She was a senior executive at Singapore-based Megaspeed, suspected of smuggling Nvidia chips to China.

The developments raise questions about whether Lutnick went too far in protecting Nvidia and whether Huang's alliance with President Donald Trump slowed efforts to restrict sales to Megaspeed.

China hawks warn that advanced chip sales accelerate China's AI development and give it an economic and military edge. Supporters say exports help US technology maintain global leadership while deterring China from developing rival products. Lutnick oversees technology export restrictions and has significant influence over China's access to American technology.

Current and former officials say Nvidia receives special treatment at the Commerce Department. Lutnick frequently contacts Huang, and Nvidia matters go through senior deputy Jeff Kessler, who rarely acts without the secretary's approval.

Nvidia general counsel Tim Teter has helped shape rules affecting the company, including through comments on draft regulations. After Teter contacted Commerce investigators and invoked Kessler's name, an agency inquiry into suspected Megaspeed chip smuggling was shut down and transferred to the Justice Department last year.

Last week, Treasury Secretary Scott Bessent confronted Lutnick at a White House meeting, asking why chip sales to Megaspeed had not been banned. Lutnick said new measures could be introduced soon. A Commerce Department spokesperson denied the exchange and said agencies had coordinated export controls. She called claims that Trump's relationship with Huang had restrained the department "false and reckless". Nvidia declined to comment; the White House did not respond. NYT

White House weighs Lutnick's ouster

Washington: Senior White House officials are discussing whether Commerce Secretary Howard Lutnick should be pushed out amid a spy scandal surrounding tab now-former CEO Jensen Huang, two people familiar with the situation said on Thursday.

Asked on CNN if Lutnick should lose his job, Republican Senator John Kennedy said: "I don't know yet." He and others have urged Lutnick to quickly publicly answer questions and noted he will be called to appear before Congress. "This is as serious as an aneurism," he said.

US downs 2 Iran drones as Tehran claims strike on radar in Bahrain

Associated Press
November 13

THE US military said Friday it shot down two Iranian attack drones headed toward Bahrain, denying Iran's claim that it had struck a US radar system in the kingdom. CENTCOM, the US command center covering the region, said there were no injuries or damage.

Iran's official IRNA news agency quoted a statement by the Revolutionary Guard as saying the attack on the radar system followed a US strike on a telecommunications pole in the southern Iranian port of Sirik.

Bahrain has been one of the strongest critics of Iran and is home to the US Navy's 5th Fleet.

The statement said the attack on the radar was a serious warning to the US to cease its strikes. It was Iran's first report of targeting a facility in Bahrain since September.

During an air war that began in February, Iran targeted US bases in neighbouring Arab nations including Bahrain in retaliation for US strikes. Bahrain's Ministry of Information did not respond to requests for comment.

Iran's Revolutionary Guard said Friday that a liquefied petroleum gas tanker struck a mine, causing an explosion, while trying to sail through the Strait of Hormuz, according to the state-run IRNA news agency.

The Guard said the vessel ignored repeated warnings while transiting the eastern part of the strait. The claim could not be independently verified, and there was no immediate report of the incident from the United Kingdom Maritime Trade Operations, a British military agency that monitors incidents at sea.

Huang exit, US scrutiny imperil $3 bn in Chinese AI projects reliant on Nvidia

Reuters
Beijing, November 13

NVIDIA HAS said US export controls have effectively shut it out of China's AI data-centre market, but a Reuters review has identified more than $3 billion in Chinese computing projects built around the American chipmaker's restricted processors.

The projects, stretching from China's wealthy coastal technology hubs to remote western provinces, reveal the scale of continuing demand for Nvidia hardware even as Washington seeks to curb Beijing's access to the technology powering the global AI boom.

The Reuters review examined over 150 Chinese procurement notices, investment plans, construction contracts and corporate disclosures, identifying projects and equipment agreements with a combined reported value exceeding $3.2 billion.

The findings paint a detailed picture of how deeply Nvidia technology remains embedded in China's AI expansion. They reveal the company's technology reaches well beyond China's largest tech firms, into local government-backed ventures, universities and regional computing centres.

The estimate includes planned investments and signed contracts as well as completed installations. It covers buildings, power systems and other infrastructure, and does not reflect spending on Nvidia chips alone. China's commerce ministry and Nvidia did not respond to request for comment.

Huang, a vocal advocate of easing export restrictions, said last year Nvidia's market share in China had fallen from 95% to zero. The company has also excluded China data-centre computing revenue from its forecasts, citing regulatory uncertainty.

China stages unannounced Pacific drills in 'silent intimidation' of Taiwan

Taipei, November 13

CHINA CARRIED out a large, unannounced military exercise across the western Pacific and around Taiwan in early November, in what officials in Taipei have described as a campaign of "silent intimidation" aimed at pressuring Taiwan and other governments before major international meetings.

A senior Taiwan security official, speaking on condition of anonymity due to the sensitivity of the matter, said China's military and coast guard had at one point massed more than 100 vessels in the region early this month, conducting drills that included simulated attacks on other militaries and cities including Taiwan's.

The drills come as China, which views democratically governed Taiwan as its own territory, has stepped up its military pressure over the past five years, drawing condemnation from Taipei and heightening concern in Western capitals about the potential for conflict.

Chinese President Xi Jinping Thursday gave a major policy speech about Taiwan, urging peaceful "reunification" though making no mention of using force. During the latest drills, a Chinese submarine also launched an intercontinental ballistic missile from the Yellow Sea into the Chinese mainland.

"It is a silent exercise — and in effect, silent intimidation," they said. "This is like a robber hiding a gun in the pocket of a coat — with the muzzle pointed at the bank teller. It scares the teller into handing over the money, while avoiding setting off the alarm and bringing in a large police response." China's defence ministry did not respond to a request for comment.

Bangladesh launches subsidised rice scheme amid wage protests

Under the special Open Market Sale (OMS) scheme, each garment worker can purchase up to 10 kg of rice a month, according to state-run BSS news agency. OMS is a government programme under which essential commodities are sold at subsidised prices to improve access for low-income consumers.

Workers will have to produce their factory identity cards and sign a master roll to purchase the subsidised rice, BSS reported.

The Food Ministry said the initiative was aimed at reducing food expenses for garment workers and improving access to essential commodities.

The programme has been introduced in line with the Bangladesh Nationalist Party's election manifesto, which pledged to strengthen social protection for marginalised and low-income people, BSS reported.

The initiative comes amid protests by garment workers demanding higher wages, with protests and factory disruptions in several industrial belts. PTI

• A FORMER SHAMASH JEWISH SCHOOL ON AL-RASHID STREET TURNED INTO MUSEUM PAYS TRIBUTE TO PROMINENT FIGURES FROM IRAQ'S JEWISH HERITAGE, INCLUDING CELEBRATED SINGER SALIMA MURAD

Baghdad's first Jewish museum draws crowds to rediscover Iraq's Jewish past

Ahmed Saeed & Ahmed Rasheed
Baghdad, November 13

DOZENS OF Iraqis visit Baghdad's first Jewish museum each day to view faded school certificates, handwritten documents and family photographs. The exhibits offer a glimpse into a once integral part of Iraqi life that has all but disappeared.

The museum occupies the historic Shamash Jewish School, founded in 1928 on Al-Rashid Street, a prominent thoroughfare in Baghdad.

Iraq's Jewish community opened the museum last month in a rare public celebration of the country's Jewish heritage.

Inside the restored building, visitors move between display cases holding personal photographs, identity cards, graduation certificates and records of Jewish students who studied at the school, which the Jewish philanthropist Yacoub Shlomo Shamash founded.

Framed black-and-white portraits line the walls, among them an image of Sassoon Heskel, a Baghdad-born Jew who served as Iraq's first finance minister after the modern state was founded in 1920.

Born into a Jewish family in Baghdad, Murad rose to fame in the 1920s and 1930s as one of Iraq's most acclaimed vocalists, known for performing the traditional Iraqi Maqam, a classical Arabic musical form, and lighter popular songs. Her career reflected the prominent role Jews once played in Iraq's cultural life.

No Jewish visitors have come yet, but Iraqis have arrived in significant numbers since the museum opened, said Ammar al-Tamimi, legal representative of the Jewish community in Iraq. Nabil Abdul Hameed, a 71-year-old Baghdad resident who has visited twice, said he did not believe the museum existed until he saw it himself.

He first visited alone and later returned with his daughter, a physician, and her children. "I saw people's interest in this subject, and I hope it is a seed of goodness that grows in the future, because the Jews were among the founders of this country," he said.

"I hope those in charge will think about bringing the Jews back. The Jews have property, history and heritage. I wish they would come and take part in the revival of the country."

Tamimi said the museum was created to preserve the school's memory after demographic and economic changes transformed the surrounding area. The building is now part of a commercial district with warehouses and can no longer operate as a school, he said.

The project was led by Khalida Fouad Eliyahu, a 64-year-old dentist born in Baghdad to a Jewish family who heads Iraq's small remaining Jewish community. She wants to restore other landmarks linked to the country's centuries-old Jewish presence, Tamimi said, adding that all funding for the museum came from Jewish community resources.

Historian Saadi al-Iraqi welcomed the opening and called for wider preservation of Iraq's Jewish heritage. "This step is wonderful and beautiful, and we want more," he said. "I want the synagogues to open. We want houses of worship to open too."

Under Ottoman rule and into the first half of the 20th century, Jews made up roughly a fifth of Baghdad's population.

Jewish communities in West Asia stretch back over 2,500 years, but anti-Jewish violence, fanned by Arab nationalism, started to sweep through the region in the early 1940s, gradually driving out most Jews.

Iraq's Jewish community numbered about 150,000 in 1947. Between 1950 and 1952, around 125,000 Iraqi Jews were airlifted to Israel. Nowadays, official Iraqi figures show only a handful of Jews remain in Baghdad, living quietly for safety reasons, while around 90 Jews of Kurdish origin still live in the Kurdistan region. REUTERS

Tata Sons' listing will not affect 'Tata model', say Venu, Vijay Singh

Mumbai, November 13

DIFFERENCES WITHIN Tata Trusts over the future of Tata Sons have deepened, with vice-chairmen Venu Srinivasan and Vijay Singh defending Tata Sons' September 17 board decision, questioning opposition to the listing and raising concerns over seven months of leadership uncertainty.

Their latest intervention comes in the form of a detailed rebuttal to trustee Darius Khambata's criticism of the September 17 board meeting and the proposed listing of the holding company.

In a letter dated November 11, addressed to Khambata and copied to all trustees, including Noel Tata, the two senior trustees challenged his account of the events surrounding the Reserve Bank of India's (RBI) decision on Tata Sons' regulatory status, the proposed stock market listing, the reappointment of N Chandrasekaran as executive chairman and the role of the Trusts' nominees on the Tata Sons board.

The letter marks another significant development in the growing differences among trustees over the governance and future direction of the Tata Group.

Srinivasan and Singh rejected Khambata's assessment that Tata Sons' engagement with the RBI had failed to produce meaningful results.

They said the engagement began in 2023, led to the repayment of debt and an application for deregistration in March 2024, and continued subsequently. They argued that the RBI's decision, following a two-year review, that Tata Sons remained a systemically significant financial institution and was required to comply with the listing framework could not be attributed to inadequate advocacy by the company.

"The engagement with the RBI began in 2023 resulting in paying off the debt and the deregistration application in March 2024 and continued thereafter. The Trustees were kept informed throughout, and neither you nor any other Trustee described the effort as inadequate at the time," they wrote. Earlier this month, senior advocate Darius Khambata announced that he would not seek reappointment as a trustee of Sir Dorabji Tata Trust (SDTT) and Sir Ratan Tata Trust (SRTT), raising fresh questions about the internal dynamics of the institutions that control the Tata Group.

They cited international examples, including Novo Nordisk, Hershey, Lundbeck and Demant, where foundations or trusts retain significant influence despite the companies being publicly listed.

"The Trusts would remain shareholders of Tata Sons before and after listing, and their shareholding, dividends and the philanthropy those dividends fund would be unaffected," Srinivasan and Singh wrote.

Closer home, they cited Tata Consultancy Services, Tata Steel, Tata Power and Tata Motors, arguing that listed companies could undertake long-term investments and nation-building projects.

Listing would not automatically weaken the relationship between Tata Sons and its charitable shareholders, as the Trusts would continue to hold shares and receive dividends to support their philanthropic activities, they said.

Paytm gets RBI's in-principle nod for wallet services

ENS Economic Bureau
Mumbai, November 13

THE RESERVE Bank of India (RBI) has granted in-principle approval to Paytm Payments Services Ltd (PPSL), a wholly owned subsidiary of One 97 Communications, to set up and operate a payment system for issuing and operating prepaid payment instruments (PPIs), including wallets, in India.

In a disclosure to the stock exchanges on Friday, One 97 Communications said PPSL had received a letter from the RBI dated November 13, granting the in-principle authorisation under the Payment and Settlement Systems Act, 2007.

The approval is subject to compliance with the RBI's Master Directions on Prepaid Payment Instruments, dated August 27, 2021, as updated from time to time.

The development brings Paytm a step closer to resuming wallet services through its wholly owned subsidiary. The company had disclosed in its first-quarter FY2027 earnings release that PPSL had applied for a wallet licence.

Paytm shares closed 1.14% higher at Rs 1,945 on the exchanges on Friday.

FINAL APPROVAL PENDING

However, the RBI's in-principle approval does not allow PPSL to immediately commence wallet operations. The company can issue prepaid payment instruments, including wallets, only after receiving final authorisation or a Certificate of Authorisation from the central bank.

The RBI has laid down certain conditions that PPSL must fulfil before securing final approval. It has advised the company to undertake a system audit, including a cyber security audit, through an auditor empanelled with CERT-In or a qualified information systems auditor.

The audit must cover the requirements specified under the RBI's Master Directions on Cyber Resilience and Digital Payment Security Controls for non-bank Payment System Operators, dated November 5, 2026.

The company has also been asked to ensure compliance with the RBI's April 6, 2018, circular on storage of payment system data.

SIX-MONTH DEADLINE

The RBI has stipulated a six-month deadline from the date of its letter for submission of the system audit report. Failure to submit the report within this period will result in the in-principle authorisation automatically lapsing. In such a situation, the central bank will not consider granting final authorisation thereafter.

The RBI has further advised PPSL that any change in the company's shareholding or ownership should be guided by its July 4, 2022, directions on obtaining prior approval in cases involving the takeover or acquisition of control of non-bank payment system operators, and the sale or transfer of payment system activities.

REGULATORY BACKDROP

The RBI had earlier taken action against Paytm Payments Bank Ltd primarily because of persistent regulatory non-compliance, weaknesses in its systems and controls, and serious supervisory concerns.

The matter culminated in the major restrictions announced on January 31, 2024. The RBI cancelled the banking licence of Paytm Payments Bank on April 24, 2026.

Indian airlines IndiGo and Air India reported problems with their email services. REUTERS

A MASSIVE global outage at Microsoft disrupted email services, workplace communication tools, and several cloud-based applications for nearly a day, affecting businesses, government agencies, airlines, and millions of users across countries.

The disruption, which began on Thursday (November 12) and continued till Friday, hit some of Microsoft's most widely used products, including Outlook, Teams, Microsoft 365 and its artificial intelligence (AI) assistant Copilot.

The outage also affected government communication systems in Japan, Singapore and Australia, while Indian airlines IndiGo and Air India reported problems with their email services.

AI companies OpenAI and Anthropic also faced disruptions to their Microsoft 365 integrations. In the US, outage tracking website Downdetector recorded more than 130,000 reports of Outlook-related problems at the peak of the disruption.

Microsoft said it was gradually restoring services but warned that recovery remained uneven across regions. The incident has once again exposed the extent to which critical institutions and businesses depend on a handful of technology companies.

What caused it

The disruption appears to have originated in Microsoft's Exchange Online infrastructure, which powers email and calendar services for businesses. Microsoft initially identified an unusually high load on parts of its infrastructure before finding that several servers had unexpectedly become unavailable, putting additional pressure on the remaining systems.

The impact

Microsoft said the disruption affected services relying on Exchange Online, although several functions remained operational. Exchange Online is Microsoft's cloud-based email and calendar service for businesses and organisations, powering email communication, scheduling and contact management through applications such as Outlook.

Outlook users experienced difficulties accessing mailboxes and sending or receiving emails. Microsoft Teams users faced problems scheduling meetings, managing calendars and creating certain events, although core messaging, calls, and meetings largely continued working.

The consequences extended beyond Microsoft's customers. British police forces reported difficulties receiving online crime reports, while the UK's National Health Service faced email disruptions that could delay prescriptions. Government email systems were affected in Singapore and Japan, while the Philippines' Supreme Court also reported operational difficulties.

In India, IndiGo warned that its email support services were disrupted, while Air India temporarily rerouted customer emails. Both airlines said flight operations remained unaffected. OpenAI and Anthropic separately reported problems with connectors linking their AI services to Microsoft applications.

Why Microsoft matters

Microsoft is among the world's largest technology companies. Its products are embedded in the everyday operations of corporations, governments, educational institutions, and critical infrastructure providers.

In January 2026, Microsoft said its Microsoft 365 commercial business had crossed 450 million paid seats worldwide. Its annual revenue reached approximately $332 billion in FY2026, reflecting the scale of its software and cloud businesses.

This dependence also means failures in shared infrastructure can spread across otherwise unrelated organisations, disrupting communications and business operations simultaneously.

The latest disruption recalls July 2024, when millions of Windows computers displayed the dreaded "blue screen of death", grounding flights, disrupting hospitals, and affecting banking, retail, and government services worldwide.

That incident, however, was different. It was triggered by a faulty software update from cybersecurity company CrowdStrike, rather than a failure in Microsoft's own cloud infrastructure. Microsoft estimated that around 8.5 million Windows devices were affected, representing less than 1% of all Windows machines.

India must hold satellite 'kill switch', says Sunil Mittal

Press Trust of India
New Delhi, November 13

BHARTI AIRTEL founder and chairman Sunil Bharti Mittal has called for India to retain control over the "kill switch" for satellite communications operating in the country, warning against dependence on a single foreign provider as the government weighs security conditions for the launch of satellite broadband services.

"The kill switch, as we call it, should not be sitting somewhere else. India must have control over its own space destiny," Mittal said in an interview with PTI marking the 50th anniversary of Bharti Enterprises.

His remarks come amid an increasingly public contest between satellite operators seeking access to India's potentially vast market, with Elon Musk's Starlink and Bharti-backed Eutelsat OneWeb awaiting regulatory clearances to begin commercial operations.

The comments also acquire significance against the backdrop of a growing dispute over Starlink's entry into India. Mittal said OneWeb's ground infrastructure had been ready for three years and its satellites had been hovering over India for five years, but the company was still awaiting the government's signal to begin commercial services.

CEA flags limits of interest rate hikes to tackle inflation globally

ENS Economic Bureau

Chief Economic Advisor V Anantha Nageswaran. EXPRESS

Monetary policy is likely to become relatively less effective in tackling inflation globally, with fiscal intervention and other public policy measures assuming greater importance as economies grapple with supply-side disruptions, Chief Economic Advisor (CEA) V Anantha Nageswaran said on Friday.

Speaking at the annual food systems dialogues 2026 here, Nageswaran cautioned that conventional monetary policy tools, particularly interest rate hikes, may prove inadequate in addressing inflation driven by supply constraints.

In some circumstances, he said, tighter monetary policy could even worsen the underlying economic challenges.

The statement assumes significance as retail inflation rose above the Reserve Bank of India's 2-6% tolerance range for the first time since October 2024, hitting a 2-year high of 6.09% in October. This increased the chance of more interest rate hikes this financial year. The rise in consumer price index inflation from 5.54% in September was led by higher food prices, which relate more to supply concerns, although price pressures intensified across the board.

"Raising interest rates will not solve the supply-induced problems. If anything, it may even be counterproductive," the CEA said, stressing that governments would increasingly need to rely on fiscal measures and other policy interventions to address inflationary pressures.

He, however, clarified that his observations were about the global economy in general and should not be interpreted as a specific assessment of India.

On October 7, 2026, the RBI raised the benchmark repo rate by 25 basis points to 5.5%—marking its first rate hike in nearly four years. FE

BoP sees $8.8-bn surplus in Sept despite wider CAD

New Delhi: India's Balance of Payments (BoP) saw an $8.8 billion surplus in September, mainly because of a high capital account surplus while the current account deficit (CAD) widened, data released by the Reserve Bank of India (RBI) on Friday showed.

But, in contrast, September 2025 saw foreign exchange reserves deplete $5.6 billion on a BoP basis.

The BoP was in a surplus of $45.4 billion in August mainly because of large inflows for the RBI's Foreign Currency Non-Resident Bank (FCNRB) scheme, which ended in August.

High FCNR (B) inflows led to a BoP surplus of $66.8 billion in the first half of FY27 compared to a $6.4 billion deficit in April-September 2025. FE

Tata Motors PV posts Q2 loss on JLR restructuring

The company said its luxury brand Jaguar Land Rover (JLR) recorded exceptional items of £530 million in the quarter, reflecting restructuring activities, including separation costs and the write-down of intangible assets under development.

The automaker's consolidated revenue from operations rose 34% on year to Rs 96,920 crore. The company said its EBITDA (Earnings before interest, taxes, depreciation, and amortization) margin rose 630 basis points to 6.2% during the period.

Govt says will honour duty cuts on Scotch imports from UK

New Delhi: India's finance ministry has engaged with stakeholders on the issue of bulk Scotch whiskey imports from Britain, and New Delhi will honour duty concessions offered as part of its trade deal with London, Indian trade secretary Rajesh Agrawal said on Friday. CCPA fines Ola Rs 10 lakh over pre-ride tips

New Delhi: The Central Consumer Protection Authority (CCPA) has imposed a penalty of Rs 10 lakh on ANI Technologies Private Limited, which operates ride-hailing platform Ola, for soliciting additional payments from customers before their journeys were completed. The regulator, in an order dated November 10, said the pre-ride 'tip' or 'add-on' feature misled consumers, amounted to an unfair trade practice and employed a dark pattern. The order directed Ola to discontinue the practice immediately. PTI

Forex reserves rise $2.49 bn to $719.55 bn

Mumbai: India's forex reserves increased by $2.49 billion to $719.56 billion during the week ended November 6, according to the RBI data released on Friday. In the previous week, the forex reserves had dropped by $2.69 billion to $717.06 billion. The reserves had touched an all-time high of $785.71 billion during the week ended September 4, driven by a heavy flow of currency as part of a special concessional swap for deposits from the diaspora through which banks raised a record $133 billion, but had been on a decline ever since. During the week ended November 6, foreign currency assets, a big component of reserves, rose by $232 million to $591.350 billion. REUTERS

Fed's Warsh to take stock of AI rise as US public grows wary

San Francisco, November 13

FEDERAL RESERVE officials expect artificial intelligence will reshape the US economy, an idea that proponents of the technology in Silicon Valley have plastered on billboards and TV and pushed in public debate as they channel trillions of dollars into data centers and billions into their bank accounts.

But how the region's new tech boom evolves, and on what timetable, remains a wild card for central bankers responsible for managing inflation and employment in the short term. In a public forum on Monday in San Francisco, Fed Chairman Kevin Warsh will try to understand better the risks and benefits he and his colleagues may have to balance — from the possible large-scale loss of jobs to the promise of rapid economic growth and falling prices.

The forum, the only scheduled public event of the five task forces Warsh established early in his tenure this year to review issues of major importance to the Fed, will take him to the epicenter of an emerging industry he sees as a "hinge point in history," even as last week's midterm elections sparked a backlash against rapid data center construction and raised the specter of deepening inequality.

For all of AI's disinflationary potential, Warsh is convening the discussion while the frenetic AI buildout is having the opposite effect — driving up prices in a way that increasingly concerns many Fed officials, with no clarity for when it may let up and with the possibility the central bank may need to slow the very thing Warsh sees as revolutionary. Though driven by local politics, the concerns range from local land use to the impact on children's and societal mental health, the potential for stress in financial markets as capital is channeled through increasingly complex AI funding vehicles, and, most recently, risks to national security after revelations about a top tech industry executive's relationship with an alleged Chinese spy. "We have to make sure that AI is used responsibly and ethically," Oakland Mayor Barbara Lee said recently as she joined a movement to ban local data center construction that has taken root just across San Francisco Bay. "It can't become a tool that compounds the biases that are already built into our systems. It can't be a tool for harm, for discrimination, or for displacement."

Frenetic AI buildout is driving up prices in a way that is increasingly concerning many Fed officials. REUTERS

It may be difficult for participants in the three-hour forum on Monday to cover the sweeping set of issues that will determine whether AI deployment accelerates or slows, and therefore how deep an impact it might have on inflation, employment and other data the Fed watches.

An agenda published by the San Francisco Fed says the event, including three panels of speakers bookended by comments from Warsh, will offer "input from a wide range of stakeholders on technology's implications for the economy and the labor market."

This Underdog Story goes the Distance

Shubhra Gupta

A MOVIE ABOUT the making of a movie is an old movie schtick which can be a hit or miss. But to make it with such heart and craft makes I Play Rocky a clear winner.

The film is, of course, the 1976 Rocky, starring Sylvester Stallone In and As Rocky Balboa, the loser who kept fighting, rocking back with each stab, refusing to go down. By the time I saw the film, many years had elapsed from the original release, and its hero had made a name for himself in doing similar kinds of roles, not to speak of fronting a mega-successful franchise, an endless fount which kept giving, all the way till its fifth iteration.

Everyone loves a good underdog story, and Rocky's is the ultimate: he even has to sell his beloved puppy because he has no money to keep him well-fed. That's one of the many moments in I Play Rocky, deftly directed by Peter Farrelly (Dumb And Dumber, There's Something About Mary) that you are made to feel for young wannabe actor Micky Stallone (Anthony Ippolito) who is struggling to make something of himself in the New York of the '70s.

Curt rejections at auditions. No rent money. Sleeping on the street, with an abandoned pup for warmth. So many classic rags-to-riches stories have had these elements — except maybe that specific bit about Micky having to work in a pornographic film to make ends meet — but Farrelly makes it all spring.

That's mainly because Ippolito, with an uncanny resemblance to the real Stallone, makes the part his own: in the beginning, you go, oh that was so like the lumbering Sly, that droopy-eyed mumble, or that likeable smile, and then you clock what the actor in front of you is doing, and begin enjoying him for his own sake.

It is a really tough thing to pull off: playing the part of an iconic leading man in an iconic movie, with conviction. Ippolito manages it in spades. And all the other parts, big and small, are equally convincing. As Rocky's sweetheart, Sasha Czack (AnnaSophia Robb) is both sweet and strong, and the one who is responsible for him using his own name on his script: there can be a hundred Mickys, she says, but there is only one Sylvester.

What gives the film its layers is the depiction of how it got made. Or rather, almost didn't. At each step, snarky movie executives, dressed to the nines like Hollywood movie executives used to in the '70s, keep picking holes in the process: what, no stars?

Toby Kebbell and PJ Byrne play the producers who start off reluctant and then become Sylvester's staunchest supporters, along with Tracy Letts as the tight-fisted big studio man and Stephan James as the guy who has to get punched in the ring.

Nifty little asides about The Godfather, the Big Mob Movie which defined the '70s, are strewn throughout the script, which loses some of its niftiness in the parts which become a trifle repetitive: Sylvester saying 'no' to 25 thousand dollars which gets upped to nearly 300,000 to sell his script and let someone else play the lead is a bit of a stretch. As are some of the snags that keep stopping the brand-new technology of the steadicam and its doughty carrier, giving the film and its leading man their distinctive jagged energy.

But by the end, the hand-held camera accompanying Rocky Balboa up the steps of the Philadelphia Museum of Art, bouyed by that swelling track, is as rousing as everything else that has gone before. This is a film for those who love films: I watched it with a large smile plastered across my face.

Too Safe to Entertain

Shubhra Gupta

LUCKNOW IS clearly the new flavour of the season: Parivarik ManuRanjan, which takes its job of being a 'family-oriented film' very seriously indeed, is the third or fourth recent film set in UP's historic capital.

But it's also an enterprise which has taken to heart the recent insistence on the city's vegetarian version, given just how lacking the two romantic leads are in hearty red blood cells. Pankaj Tripathi and Aditi Rao Hydari, let loose in a large kothi in the city's well-known Chowk area, are the very epitome of wholesomeness, without a single lustful thought crossing their minds.

The writer-trio, which includes the director, Brijendra Kala, who has a supporting part, as well as Abbas Ali Jafar, is so intent on giving us a 'clean' rom-com that they forget to spice things up. Nary a glimpse of the city's world-famous kebabs, tauba tauba, only bhindi ki sabzi, leavened by an occasional bite of a cheese-burst pizza.

Pankaj Tripathi is always watchable, but even he can't do much when he has been written into such staidness. His Ranjan Dubey, with a sarkari job in the bijli department, busy marrying off several sisters, has never given a thought to his bachelor status. The entrance of lovely new housekeeper Helen (Aditi Rao Hydari) is a sign that things are about to change.

She beavers away, cleaning and cooking up a storm, electrifying his neighbours and colleagues with her mere presence: tongues start wagging, and we stand by for the good-natured Tripathi-Dubey to make his move. His sisters and their spouses, with Vijayant Kohli being the only standout, start protesting: of course there has to be something fishy about this girl who seems too good to be true. Is Helen, a word carrying smirky overtones, even her real name?

This could have been a great chance to carve Tripathi a new image, given how he's been stuck in avuncular father-deadly gangster type roles. If only the writing had lifted itself out of its familiar sitcom zone — the whole bidyut office scene looks like a straight lift from Gullak, as does the appearance of Bittu-ki-mummy Sunita Rajwar in a near-similar part; the scooter-riding, tiffin-carrying persona reminds you of the lead in Rab Ne Bana Di Jodi — this may have turned into a sweet-and-spicy romance.

But the film is too safe, too dull: in short, a lost opportunity.

Shubhra Gupta

BASED ON a 2011 novel of the same name, Wildwood is animated by the distinctive motion-capture style of Laika Studios, with an A-list star cast doing the voice-work. It follows brave teenager Prue (Peyton Elizabeth Lee) who goes into the dark woods in search of her infant brother, kidnapped by a murder of crows.

She is not alone: for company, she has her pal Curtis (Jacob Tremblay), who, naturally, has a crush on her. As the twosome forges deeper into the forest, they begin encountering a whole host of creatures — fearsome coyotes, helpful birds, cute rats — along with several other magical, mystical people.

There is the grieving dowager governess Alexandra (Carey Mulligan) who hasn't got over the loss of her own young son. Armed with her expertise of the Black Arts in her quest to get her little boy back, will she help Prue and Curtis? Or does she harbour ill-will towards the two youngsters in her domain? There is an ancient crone with special powers, who is the keeper of many secrets. It takes a while to get a fix on the host of characters, especially if one is not familiar with the book. The forest is sharply divided and fought over by a group of Bandits, led by King Brendan (Mahershala Ali) and the dowager's army of coyotes, in their spiffy red jackets and bayonets. And 'Outsiders' are strictly not welcome.

Wise old owl Rex (Richard E Grant) and giant golden eagle Rex (Angela Bassett) show up to support the wanderers as they battle inimical forces. Smart rat Septima (Awkwafina) who makes light of her long protruding teeth, is especially helpful when Curtis is caged along with many other captives.

The exuberance of these sequences, especially the one in which the giant eagle streaks across the skies with Prue on his back, reminding you of the noble Jatayu's feats in Ramayana, lifts the film. It slows down in those parts in which she stumbles upon her parents' long-held secrets, as well as some others in which the forest's hidden spots are revealed as bureaucratic strongholds. It may have been funny in the book; here they just slow things down.

Alaka Sahani

WATCHING A resolute Judy Heumann passionately campaign for the enactment of Section 504, which guarantees equal rights and access to people with disabilities in America, hits too close to home. In an unprecedented act of defiance, Heumann (played by BAFTA-winning British actor Ruth Madeley) leads a group of protesters in occupying the San Francisco Federal Building for 26 days, refusing to leave until their demands are met.

Having unexpectedly witnessed the power of protests in India in recent months and reminded of the impact they can create, it is impossible not to be moved by the determination of these activists as they fight for their most basic rights in the America of '70s. What makes their struggle particularly compelling is the sheer audacity of a group of people, long rendered invisible by society, taking on the might of the government and refusing to back down.

Being Heumann, which premiered as the opening-night film at the Toronto International Film Festival (TIFF), is a remarkable follow-up to director Sian Heder's Oscar-winning CODA (2021). The latter follows Ruby Rossi, the child of deaf adults and the only hearing member of her family, as she pursues her dream of becoming a singer. It helped bring conversations around disability and representation to a wider international audience. Being Heumann takes it forward.

In Being Heumann, Heder places a group of gritty protesters at the centre of the narrative. They are no longer willing to accept marginalisation and demand access to public spaces, education and opportunities that the implementation of Section 504 would guarantee. Standing in their way is a federal government reluctant to commit to the financial implications of the legislation, with Department of Health, Education, and Welfare secretary Joseph Califano Jr (Mark Ruffalo) emerging as a key obstacle.

The struggle of Heumann, one of the most prominent disability rights activists in America, whose work spanned several decades until her death in 2023, has been well documented. But Heder, who has co-written the screenplay with Rebekah Taussig, approaches this pivotal chapter in her life with considerable spunk and energy. She captures the first major political act in Heumann's long battle against discrimination without losing sight of the other people behind the movement.

The impressive ensemble of differently abled actors led by Madeley, who was born with spina bifida and uses a wheelchair, brings an authenticity to this story of collective resistance. Apart from fine performances, music by Francesco Le Metre, cinematography by Jamie Ramsay and editing by Geraud Brisson contribute to make this narrative engaging and add an energetic vibe.

Being Heumann is a gripping account of what happens when people who have been systematically excluded decide that they will no longer wait for someone else to make room for them. Importantly, the film does not reduce its disabled characters to figures of sympathy. They are presented as strong-willed individuals who are ready to own their stories, assert their rights and fight their battles.

NEW ZEALAND VS INDIA: FOURTH ODI

89 all out: India tumble at Tauranga

Henry's 6/27, including three wickets in first over — Rohit, Virat and Shreyas — derails India's chase of 334

Shuvaditya Bose

Matt Henry recorded his best figures in an ODI on Friday. AP

SIX MINUTES and 49 seconds.

By convention, ODI cricket, the sport's middle child, is meant to span approximately 465 minutes, should the day be an ordinary one. Friday at Tauranga held not an iota of the ordinary. In an extraordinary first over from Matt Henry, which lasted six minutes and 49 seconds, India lost all of their three batting stalwarts — Rohit Sharma, Virat Kohli and Shreyas Iyer before they could even get off the mark. At about 6.50PM local time, India walked into the Bay Oval dressing room believing, by their captain Shreyas Iyer's own admission, that they "would be cruising through the chase" of 334. Had they cruised, India would have recorded their highest successful ODI chase in this part of the world. Records were indeed made, but of a different sort: Iyer's men folded for 89 and lost by 244 runs — their second-biggest ODI defeat in terms of runs.

Officially, the innings lasted 160 deliveries, yet 154 of them were academic. Matt Henry inflicted damage of unprecedented scale in the very first over — the statement having statistical proof. He had been India's nemesis in the 2019 World Cup semi-final, and though the stakes were lower here, the performance rose higher still.

First came an outswinger that left Rohit Sharma at his wit's end. He edged to Finn Allen at first slip, lodging his first ODI golden duck in fourteen years. Virat Kohli followed for a duck three balls later, and might have gone golden as well, had another outswinger not missed his edge by a hair's breadth. Taking the ball away from the right-hander, however, was not the only trick up Henry's sleeve, as Kohli learnt minutes later.

On the penultimate ball of the over came a nip-backer, and the stroke Kohli offered would have convinced anyone that a novice, not ODI cricket's second-highest run-scorer, stood at the crease. Castled, stumps shattered, a flummoxed expression: the usual script followed.

Henry still had one card to play — his last leaf. Iyer was pinned on the pads, just above the knee roll, by another inswinger. Kumar Dharmasena was determined to keep his hands tucked, until his hand was forced by technology.

India were 0/3 after one over. Before Friday, their ODI history stretched across 1,087 matches and 52 years, a sample so vast as to suggest we live in an age of post-cricket, where everything that could have been seen, has been seen. Welcome, Matt Henry. India had never before been 0/3 after the first over.

The burden fell upon Ruturaj Gaikwad and Ishan Kishan. For Gaikwad, in only his fourth overseas ODI, inexperience showed in the manner of his going: a nothing shot at a Kyle Jamieson delivery that took the edge and nestled in the hands of Michael Bracewell at second slip. Jamieson might have had a second, and Axar Patel might have joined Rohit and Kohli on the roll of ducks, but Nick Kelly averted both by putting down a dolly at point.

Amid the collective flailing, one individual agenda was at least served. Ishan would not have been out in the middle but for the Test stalwarts' early departure to acclimatise with the red cherry. His 27 from 53 balls was less a devil-may-care assault on the improbable chase than a statement of intent and belonging ahead of next year's World Cup. It took the home captain, Mitchell Santner, turning back to Henry for a second spell to end it. With his first ball back, a nip-backer married to awkward bounce rattled both Ishan and the triad of composite plastic sticks behind him. Everything thereafter was merely an extension of agony for India as Henry headed home with figures of 6/27.

First innings

Earlier, the hosts rode Will Young's 125 to post a 333-run total. Young might have fallen in the second over, off Auqib Nabi, but Rohit shelled a regulation chance at slip, and Ishan grassed another casual one the very next ball.

For the first 11 overs, Young sat contentedly as a passenger princess, witnessing Tim Seifert's batting explosives, and also his expletives, the keeper-batter having fallen into an altercation with Gurnoor Brar. The seamer had the last laugh in the 12th over, with an elaborate send-off planned, thwarted only by the pacifist Kohli.

India enjoyed a brief revival when Patel and Nabi removed Kelly and Dean Foxcroft in quick succession, but a 90-run fourth-wicket stand between Young, who turns 34 in a few days, and Allen restored New Zealand's course. India pegged them back over the last 15 overs, which yielded only 91 runs. As it turned out, even that was more than India's batters could collectively muster.

No point sweeping it under the carpet: Gambhir on collapse

New Delhi, November 13

Gautam Gambhir was critical of India's batting show. CREIMAS

THE INDIAN batting unit, featuring two of the seven leading run-scorers in ODI cricket, unravelled spectacularly at the Bay Oval in Mount Maunganui on Friday. Chasing a target of 334, India were bowled out for a paltry 89, their lowest total in 15 years, as the 2011 World Cup champions slumped to a 244-run defeat.

Matt Henry inflicted much of the damage, claiming three wickets in the space of the first over, with Rohit Sharma, Virat Kohli and Shreyas Iyer all departing for ducks. He eventually finished with six wickets. The capitulation followed another, albeit less catastrophic, batting collapse at Wellington six days earlier, when India lost seven wickets for 111 runs.

Fronting questions from the media in the aftermath of the defeat, head coach Gautam Gambhir made little attempt to play down the concerns surrounding his team's batting.

"There's no point sweeping it under the carpet," Gambhir said. "In fact, it wasn't just this match. If you look back at the previous match too, there as well we were seven down for 111. So today we lost, which is why we are probably talking about it, that it was a huge defeat, no doubt about it — but in the previous match too, if you're chasing 135 and you get seven down for 111, obviously there is a bit of a concern, because there is help for the bowlers here. So we have to be ready not only mentally, but from the skill point of view as well."

With the 2027 World Cup in South Africa looming, Gambhir acknowledged that the conditions in New Zealand offered a glimpse of the challenges India could encounter at the tournament.

"You're always concerned when you get bundled out for 90-odd. I think I will be concerned because obviously these are conditions which are going to be closest to what we might get during the World Cup... I think the bigger concern is not the runs, it's how quickly we got bundled out — I think around 26 or 27 overs. So hopefully we can try and rectify that as soon as possible."

While Henry bowled six exceptional deliveries in the first over, three of them resulting in wickets, Gambhir was unwilling to entertain the notion of unplayable deliveries at the international level.

"There are no unplayable deliveries, to be honest. In international cricket, you should be able to cope with any kind of deliveries. We know (how) the conditions are going to be in New Zealand where it's going to seam with the new ball. We got that kind of help when we were bowling with the new ball as well. And obviously, he (Matt Henry) bowled some really good areas. So when he bowled those areas, we should have the ability to negate those first 10 overs, and we know that there's always help in the first 10 overs, and when you lose three wickets in the first over, obviously, you're very much behind the game."

Evolving to survive: IPL generation uses white-ball route to fulfill cricketing dreams

Lalith Kalidas
New Delhi, November 13

Saurashtra's Ruchit Ahir (L) in the state T20 league; Vishal Nishad featured in the UPT20. INSTAGRAM

DAKSH KAMRA, 23, wanted to pursue fast bowling as a teenager. A back injury stalled that dream.

Standing six feet tall, the boy from Hisar, Haryana, is now a 'mystery spinner'. He idolises its two pioneers, Sunil Narine and Varun Chakaravarthy, and landed a dream ticket to join them last year: a Rs 30 lakh contract with the Kolkata Knight Riders.

Vishal Nishad, 21, played tennis-ball cricket in Gorakhpur. He joined his father in masonry and carpentry work before a local coach spotted something in the 'tennis-baller'. That was three years ago. In December 2025, Nishad landed a ticket to the IPL, a Rs 30 lakh call-up to Punjab Kings.

The domestic white-ball season begins with the Syed Mushtaq Ali Trophy (SMAT) T20s on Saturday, but Kamra and Nishad will not be in the Haryana and Uttar Pradesh dugouts.

"There's Yuzvendra Chahal, Rahul Tewatia and Nishant Sindhu. Whom can he replace? The association is very supportive, but he will have to wait," said Kamra's coach Sandeep Kharb, a former left-arm pacer who represented Haryana in age-group cricket.

Kamra and Nishad are not the only men of their ilk. A whole generation that grew up on sweaty IPL summers is on the rise. This tribe of outliers mirrors the globe-trotting T20 freelancer in India. There is talent in the group, but so are uncertainties regarding career, income and exposure to high-intensity cricket every year.

Only the most fortunate make it to the IPL, besides representing their states in the SMAT or the Vijay Hazare Trophy, ensuring four months of cricket in a year.

Since 2019, only 11 players have made their professional debuts directly through the IPL. Only one - Harshit Rana - has gone on to represent India.

In IPL 2026, 21 players from 13 states made the cut across nine franchises without having played a First-Class game. Eight of them had only played T20 cricket at the professional level; three (including Kamra and Nishad) have not made the senior state team; and only three have made their Ranji Trophy debuts thereafter.

Together with their cricketing attributes, Gen-IPL has also latched onto hyper-local catalysts. For Kamra, it was Kharb's foresight and exposure to high-level training.

"There wasn't anything special about Daksh's leg-spin three or four years ago. Then he transformed himself," Kharb told The Indian Express.

"I told him, 'make some changes, because in today's era, flighted bowlers get hammered. You have to bowl sharp, with rotation and variations.'"

"Kumble didn't turn the ball massively. He just operated in a tight area, getting the ball to dip in or nip away off the seam in the air, with plenty of variations. I told him we needed to create variations the same way, using the crease."

> "I have written in a diary what to do and what not to do for fitness. I keep myself ready for whenever the call comes... If I'm not retained, it means that there are certain shortcomings that I need to work on"
> VISHAL NISHAD,
> ON MAINTAINING FITNESS BEFORE THE START OF THE IPL SEASON

Special preparation

"He's been in various camps for quite a while. Sometimes the Haryana camp, sometimes the IPL camp. In Hisar, JSW has a set-up for all Olympic sports," the coach says.

A thousand kilometres to the east, Nishad imbibed his first formal fitness lessons after making it to the Punjab Kings squad. Despite being part of the pre-tournament camp, Uttar Pradesh have overlooked the young tweaker for the initial SMAT rounds.

"I have written in a diary what to do and what not to do for fitness. I keep myself ready for whenever the call comes," Nishad told this newspaper from his village.

The fickleness of IPL dynamics is unsettling, but Nishad says ""I know it can be uncertain. I will just have to work harder. If I'm not retained, it means that there are certain shortcomings that I need to work on."

Two UPT20 league seasons with the Gorakhpur Lions brought him to the notice of the scouts.

"I was a natural mystery spinner with the tennis ball. I have bowled the same from the start," he said.

The possibilities in T20 cricket are fast breaching the old-school centres. Saurashtra veteran Sheldon Jackson, who has joined the team as a coach ahead of the white-ball season, observed a seismic shift in and around Rajkot.

Last season, wicketkeeper-batter Ruchit Ahir was snapped up by Mumbai Indians as a replacement player. Left-arm wrist-spinner Krains Fuletra ensured a full-term berth in the Sunrisers Hyderabad squad after stints as a net bowler.

"Ruchit is a natural, with a very fast bat-swing. Now that he has been considered for the white-ball set-up and made it to the IPL, he knows what he needs to add," Jackson, who played 286 matches for Saurashtra across formats, said.

"Whatever this format demands, this generation practises that and tries to get better. That could be power-hitting, or range hitting. That could even be sweeping fast bowlers."

VAR to debut in SAFF C'ships in India's semis against Bhutan

Press Trust of India
New Delhi, November 13

THE SOUTH Asian Football Federation (SAFF) Championships semifinal between defending champions India and Bhutan in Dhaka on Saturday will see the use of Video Assistant Referee (VAR) system for the first time in the tournament, in a bid to bring the competition in line with international refereeing standards.

However, it is a remote version of the VAR technology that will be implemented during the semi-finals and final on November 17 at the National Stadium in Dhaka.

Under the remote VAR system, live match footage from the venue will be transmitted to a centralized VAR operations hub in Thailand, where certified Video Match Officials (VMO) will review the incidents and assist the on-field referees in accordance with the IFAB VAR Protocol. Decisions and recommendations from the VAR team will be communicated directly to the match officials in Dhaka.

"We are trying to raise the profile of the SAFF Championships, so the use of remote VAR is towards that direction. Let us see, we are hoping that there would not be any glitches," SAFF General Secretary Purushottam Kattel told PTI from Dhaka.

"This Remote VAR is not much different from the on-site VAR. All the ASEAN Championships matches used remote VAR with the centralized VAR operations hub located in Thailand. So, we are doing the same," he added. SAFF has collaborated with the ASEAN Football Federation (AFF), the regional association of Southeast Asian countries.

Cummins tries to reverse the narrative: 'Khawaja 100% wrong'

Rejects allegations made by former opener that entire Australian team knew about the tampering plot

Mumbai, November 13

Australia skipper Pat Cummins spoke to the media for nearly 70 minutes in Sydney on Friday. REUTERS

AUSTRALIA CAPTAIN Pat Cummins addressed the media in Sydney on Friday, responding to allegations made by former teammate Usman Khawaja in his autobiography Sabr about the 2018 Cape Town ball-tampering scandal.

He rejected Khawaja's account that the whole team was aware of the ball-tampering incident, reflected on the Australian dressing room at the time and defended his own role in the controversy.

On Khawaja's claims

Cummins denied knowing sandpaper was being taken onto the field and rejected the suggestion that he had helped devise a plan to tamper with the ball. "When he says we all knew – if by that he means we knew sandpaper was going out on the field – he's 100% wrong. But Usman says things that are far more serious. He says I and others were architects of a scheme to ball tamper with sandpaper. That's complete and utter nonsense."

On coordinated plan

Cummins rejected suggestions that there was a plan in the Australian team to tamper with the ball, insisting no such discussions took place. "There was no masterplan around using illegal methods. People assume you have gone from legal methods to suddenly taking sandpaper and then [there] must have been some huge masterplan. The truth is that is not the case."

On CA's investigation

Cummins backed Cricket Australia's investigation but felt the suspensions imposed on Steve Smith, David Warner and Cameron Bancroft were excessive. "You can maybe argue whether the judgments were fair, but what can you do? I got asked all the questions, answered them all fairly," the skipper reiterated.

On friendship

Cummins said he supported Khawaja's right to tell his story but was disappointed with how the allegations had been presented. "Usman is a friend, but friends aren't casual with each other's reputations. In his book, Uzzy's been casual with my life and the lives of many others and, I think, Australian cricket."

On legal action

Cummins disclosed that he had received legal advice about some of the claims in Khawaja's book but ruled out pursuing the matter in court.

On team culture

Cummins described the Australian team in 2018 as having a win-at-all-costs mentality. "In a team that at that stage had a win-at-all-costs mentality, had an ugly underbelly, and there was too many silos within the team – traits I hope everyone has seen and [I've tried] very hard to eradicate for the last six years as captain. I thought the way we acted on the field was quite abrasive. I didn't like the way we spoke to umpires, the opposition."

• On race and captaincy

CUMMINS REJECTED

Khawaja's suggestion that his skin colour and background had influenced the decision not to appoint him Australian captain. He said the allegation required evidence. "Of all the things I've read, it (Khawaja's claim that he was not given the captaincy because of his skin colour and background) is the most serious. To think that the job I hold is quarantined from people based on their skin colour, it's a pretty big statement. If you are going to say that, I think you have to have evidence; I just don't think that's the case."

Threw Uzzy under the bus: Warner

Mumbai, November 13

Usman Khawaja (L) and David Warner. REUTERS

DAVID WARNER accused Pat Cummins of throwing Usman Khawaja "under the bus" after the latter's account of the 2018 Cape Town ball-tampering scandal was publicly rejected by the fast bowler.

Warner, who has backed Khawaja's version of events, expressed disappointment with Cummins' response to the allegations, describing it as unfair to his former teammate. Speaking to Fox Sports on the sidelines of the first ODI between Australia and England in Perth on Friday, the former opener said he continued to stand by what Khawaja had written in his book. "I still stick by Uzzy and what he's written in that book, because it is the truth, and I really, really support him," Warner said.

"I actually feel for him at the moment. I actually feel that today, the captain threw Uzzy under the bus, and I'm very, very disappointed about that."

Warner said the three players who faced sanctions continued to bear the consequences of the scandal, even eight years after the incident.

Smart Sen surges into semifinals, remains in Tour Finals contention

Shivani Naik
Mumbai, November 13

LAKSHYA SEN is defending ranking points from the Kumamoto Masters in Japan, where he made the semis last year. He is also in contention to clinch the last spot for the World Tour Finals. It's been a strange season for him, featuring several early exits, bookended by an All England final and a late surge in the Super 500s. Against the pugnacious Yushi Tanaka at his home tournament, Sen was particularly incisive and dogged as he won 21-16, 21-15 in 40 minutes.

In the course of the match, national coach Pullela Gopichand seemed to have sorted out one of Sen's issues: The World No.13 knows how to attack, but not always when not to. But he had "over-attack karne ki zaroorat nahi (no need to over-attack)" ringing in his ears as he navigated that crucial phase between the 12th and 18th points. On Friday at Kumamoto's Prefecture Gymnasium, Sen had had enough when Tanaka reached the 15th point, and accelerated to the finish with a curated attack – but not over-expending energy that he might need in the semis.

Tanaka was feeling sharp on the net and repeatedly tested shuttles that tippled over the net and dropped fast. At 19-15, Sen pulled off the impossible - he first picked a shuttle low from the forehand front corner, looked to have paused before moving to the backhand front corner in a blink to retrieve the bird next second. Tanaka couldn't believe his eyes and hacked it wide at the net.

Sen's flashy defence has its moments even in lost points. A body parry was followed by a tweener before Tanaka struck the lift down - but the applause was for the Indian. Sen has been attacking straight except for the elaborate cross-court smash. But the coaches would tell him to execute a direction-turn on the shuttle once he had the short-stature Tanaka committed to one flank. With his range of skills, Sen did just that - the variations in pushes from mid-court getting him through both the endgames.

The semifinals line-up sees Sen against Alwi Farhan and Kunlavut Vitidsarn vs Koki Watanabe. Sen has never beaten the Indonesian 21-year-old with a technically solid game. Alwi knows when to explode as well as any established pro, and Sen will need to watch out for that jump and overhead deception of the World No 10. With Watanabe pushing through, the semis day becomes a direct race of who could sneak into the WTF, though Kunlavut has a good measure of him. But Sen will need to defeat Alwi first.

Nagy, ex-armyman who organises chess meets on first Saturday of every month

Amit Kamath
Budapest, November 13

Laszlo Nagy

IN THE world of chess, Laszlo Nagy goes by a popular moniker. They call him Mr First Saturday, a name he has got thanks to the chess tournament he organises in Budapest. Many elite grandmasters have played in his First Saturday tournament, a tradition on the chess calendar of every month for the past 35 years.

It was here that Fabiano Caruana earned all three of his grandmaster norms. It was here that talents like Magnus Carlsen, Hikaru Nakamura, Sofia Polgar and Peter Leko competed in their early days. Some of India's recent stars like Divya Deshmukh, Leon Mendonca, Savitha Shri, Srihari LR, VS Rathanvel and Rakshitta Ravi have also competed in First Saturday over the last five years.

These days, Nagy estimates that about 30 to 40 percent of players in his First Saturday tournaments are Indians, chasing norms or a ratings boost.

"I have had so many Indian players in my tournaments that for me it is impossible to remember the names of them all. At my recent tournament in October, Srihari LR played and won the grandmaster section. I have lots of Indians in my tournament every month. Sometimes I have even had half the field from India," says Nagy.

He's even taught himself some Hindi phrases. "In the honour of my Indian chess players, I have learnt a little Hindi as well. I tell Indian players 'mujhey Hindustani shatranj khiladi pasand hai. (I like Indian chess players) and 'sab theek hai?' (everything is good?)," Nagy says goodnaturedly.

He adds that the sheer number of players from India in his tournaments are starting to make Europeans wary of his events. "Sometimes European chess players are afraid of playing in my tournaments. They say, there are too many Indians. They are afraid of Indian players. I tell them that 'you cannot be a strong player in this sport without beating the Indian players'. Sometimes the Europeans want to play against those who have high ratings but are actually weak players. I always tell them that if you are good, you will beat the Indians too."

Nagy says his tournaments are a good option for chess players who haven't crossed the Elo rating threshold of about 2500 or those chasing GM and IM norms.

Military chemistry

Before he became an organiser of chess tournaments, Nagy was a teacher of military chemistry at the Bolyai Military College in Budapest, holding the rank of captain in the Hungarian army. When the Communist system collapsed in 1991, he decided to quit the army and branch out into hosting chess tournaments in Budapest.

He says when he had asked his superiors if there was something else he could do in the army, they said it would not be possible. He was not keen on doing the same thing till he retired, so he decided to leave and do something fun instead.

"I was a chess player already. I was a player rated 2220 and was a Candidate master. There were many organisers of chess tournaments in Hungary who hosted good events. But I had the idea that I will do it better," says Nagy.

"Magnus was around 2400 rating when he played as a 14-year-old International Master in my tournament in the Grandmaster event," he recounts. "That boy was very serious and always fighting to win his games, even in totally drawish positions."

Carlsen's 15-year reign as World No. 1 comes under threat

Budapest: Magnus Carlsen's 15-year reign as the world No. 1 is facing its first real threat after he lost the first game of the third round of the Total Chess pilot tournament to Armenian grandmaster Haik Martirosyan, before American grandmaster Fabiano Caruana defeated Germany's Vincent Keymer.

If the same sequence of results is repeated in the second games on Friday, with Carlsen losing to Martirosyan and Caruana beating Keymer, the five-time world champion from Norway will be dethroned as the world No. 1 in the live ratings for the first time in 15 years. Live ratings are updated in real time, while FIDE publishes its monthly rating list at the start of each month.

Over the course of five games at the Total Chess pilot tournament in Budapest, Carlsen is yet to register a victory. After drawing four games, he suffered his first defeat of the tournament against the Armenian, who is 154 Elo rating points behind him. In five games, Carlsen's winless run has already cost him 16 rating points. ENS

Pochettino tearfully leaves US job to join Man United

Fayetteville, November 13

TEARS FILLED Mauricio Pochettino's eyes as he discussed quitting the US national team for his dream job with Manchester United. "A decision that in some parts, it's a very sad decision, in other parts, we are professional and we need also to try to find the next step, to try and make your dreams come true," he said.

Just three months after the US Soccer Federation announced his contract to lead the Americans through the 2030 World Cup, Pochettino said Friday he will depart next week for Old Trafford.

He will try to revive the 20-time English champions, in the relegation zone after 10 games of the Premier League season.

"They know that there's not too many opportunities (that) can happen in your career like a side of Manchester United and, of course, when that arrives, it's difficult to turn down," Pochettino said during an emotional news conference at the U.S. team training camp.

He signed a 2 1/2-year contract and will take over on Nov. 18 ahead of the match at Liverpool four days later, becoming United's eighth permanent coach or manager since Alex Ferguson retired in 2013.

He did not want to speak about the state of United.
